Well, I disagree on this. The leech class has been feasting on the middle calss for a long time. I think it's time the middle class got a break and the leeches were starved.

Given the amount of debt that we are discussing the only things that will work are reducing spending, reducing taxes and regulation so the economy can come back and then the expanding economy will pay it down. Provided the leech class doesn't restart spending.

Actually, when the law was right, it was proper to obey it, it is no longer that way. Some of us have become revolutionaries, and worse ...

But, I have not broken the law as badly as my government, so it is easy

Precisely. That is about the most insane idea I've ever heard. You would have to have real time data on how much everyone is earning so that if and when you crossed over into another bracket the tax could be adjusted.

Not only that, would the sales tax increase throughout the year as your income increased? Maybe base it on last year's earnings? Great, so you ake a million one year and then get laid off and then you're still paying that 42.7% tax.

And speaking of privacy, the amount of sales tax collected would be a dead give away of you income bracket, letting every sales clerk know at least the range of your income! And everyone standing in line, too.

Not to mention the nightmare of the software and databases that would have to be maintained realtime on every transaction and all earner's income. And let's not talk about the security issues with that kind of information circulating.

John Smith is a brain damaged dolt who should be confined for his own good and society's. He's also a nym changing asshole. There are 3 entries in my kill file for him already.

Yeah, isn't that what I also told you, but not is so specific of verbiage?

Please, let me correct that!:

You can go fuck yourself, or one of your homo-sucks-you-all buddies ...
I just don't care.

You can't do the homework for me, because what I say is true.

I can't be proven wrong with credible data, there isn't any ... there is good reason for that ... the crooks don't want you to know, and they are paying the government to keep the figures in the shadows to disallow a fair accounting.

Really, it is quite apparent for all to see, you just have to put it together ... and people are.

Yep, and goes to show how a prohibitive taxation rate reduces revenue.
Before he probably would have moored it at home and paid some taxes on it.
Now he moors it elsewhere and we get NO tax revenue from him for it.

Then, of course, there is all the fallout lose of tax revenue. Makers who don't pay taxes because they are out of business. Workers who don't pay taxes because they lost their jobs. People who would have provided goods and services to those workers who didn't because those workers aren't buying stuff because they lost their jobs, and so on and so forth.

In one quick swoop in an attempt to "stick it to the rich" we all but wiped out one whole segment of the economy and sent it abroad.

And you can't simply reverse the taxation and get it all back, because the expertise and experience has been dissipated and you can't just put the egg back together again.

Really? I've seen no data that shows the relative burden is any less for the wealthy.

Maybe you can show that to me?

Let's see about that shall we...

Poverty level (ability to survive) is $24,000

Which means he's $6,000 above that.

Of which he pays $900 in taxes or....15% of what they have over what it takes to live on.

So where did you get 90%? Pull it out of your ass?

Depends on their expenses doesn't it? Certainly I've heard of millionaires going bankrupt and as such it would seem these taxes could certainly play a part in that just like anyone else living beyond their means.

Really? How exactly do you determine the burden if not by the dollar amount?

One person is effectively paying 3% of his income in taxes, the other is paying 14.6%. Seems to me the burden on the rich is higher, assuming his lifestyle is also proportional to his income.

Oh, but that's right, you don't want people who busted their ass to get ahead to have any benefits for doing so.

If there is no benefit for getting ahead, why would you bust your ass to do so?

Sorry, but I don't have to disprove your claims..... you have to prove them.
That's how it works

So if you can't prove your claims are true....then I win by default.

So, since you state your claims are true, then I expect you to be able to do so on your next post or it will be accepted and positive proof that you lied

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

> Yes, he

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

No, read what he wrote: "Anything which is better than what we have now will be better".

Admittedly, this could go for the Obvious Statement of the Decade Award and blow away the competition.

Serious question: restored to what point in time? Please keep in mind that the income tax has been tinkered with on a regular basis since it came into existence.

The cap for Medicare was removed in the mid 1990's.

The cap (wage base) for Social Security is used to limit both the income that is taxed, and the benefit derived. Would you also remove the cap from the benefit?

How can you know?
Just because "it's written"?

The December 21st date in 2012 is derived from the Mayan calendars which do not specifically or even allegorically allude to an "Age of Aquarius".

The 'ages' of the zodiac, if consisting of 12 signs, are approximately 2160 years long based on the precession of the equinoxes. The precession rate is about 1 degree per 72 years. If the beginning of the "Age of Aquarius" is 2012, then the "Age of Pisces" would have commenced around 48 BCE. It is possible (the timing). Most likely the "Age of Aquarius" marks a reversal in the polarity of the 'Great Year' (25,920 - 26,000 years), as indicated by the Egyptian Sphinx - it would be a point that is about 13,000 years after the "Age of Leo" marked the spring equinox.

If the zodiac being considered consists of 13 signs rather than 12, then the length of each 'age' would be somewhat shorter, just under 2000 years. That is also possible (the timing).

There really is no reason to assume that Freemasons or even Knights Templar ever wrote anything concerning the date of December 21, 2012 unless you are suggesting pre-Columbian contact, and knowledge (and correct interpretation) of the Mayan calendars - since both groups actually existed before 1492.

Or perhaps you're trying to say that this precise date was non-arbitrarily selected as a catastrophic 'end point' by two separate groups of people on both sides of the Atlantic ocean, indicating a well-hidden awareness of a planetary cycle, and one that was not held exclusively by people in either the western or eastern hemisphere.

Is that what you're suggesting?

Sure it is. And in that case, you may be on to something.

(gawd, i'm ornery...)

The Mexico "People" are more 'diverse' than that.

Mestizo {Mixed-Race} Mexicans
Note : This is the Majority of Mexicans
* Indio-European
* Indio-African
* Tri-Racial
* * Indio+Afro+Euro

* * Indio+Asian+Euro {Asian from the Philippines}
Euro-Mexicans
* Spanish
* French
* 'other'
Los Indios {Native 'First' Peoples}
* Composed of many Tribal Groups

- Most Mexicans Mestizo mixed gene are
- brought by the Spanish's Corte Army who
- tainted with Moorish and Arab gene which
- is why most Mexicans look more like Arab
- than North American native.

No many Mexicans look more 'North African*'
-not- Arab.

* 'North African*' :
Moracco Algeria Tunisia Libya & Egypt

As you were listening in non-sideband mode you may have been hearing the ICAO HF Network (aircraft) in the NAT-E area (Between New York and the Azores) on 11309 or LDOC (Long Distance Operational Control) out of Ottawa, CanaDuh on 11311, also aircraft.

Those are two possibilities.

There is Linux control for all current receivers. See Hamlib. As far as I/Q demodulators, the pickings are a little slimmer.

I have some friends who've used both the TS-590 and the FT-950 and they are definitely not unanimous in which rig they prefer. I think it will depend largely on your operating habits and to what extent you emphasize HF operation. I notice that the TS-590 only has 2 roofing filters compared the the 3 in the FT-950.

>What does "legitimate expense" have to do with anything?

Income taxes are based upon net income, not gross income. Obviously when you buy a trinket for $2 and sell it for $3, your net income is less than $3. You likely have other expenses that make it less than $1. There are lots of laws defining what expenses are legitimate.

>Are you suggesting we have more than one deduction?

I'm not sure which deduction you are referring to here. The personal deduction for being a person? If so, then someone with a child has more than one deduction. Or are you referring to something else?

>Doesn't that simply impose the complexity you claim we need to avoid, and >allow loopholes and special 'favors' that you claim we need to eliminate?

If I understand you correctly, laws defining allowable expenses impose complexity - but not simply.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

I was looking at the Flex-3000. Thus far, I have only read the info on their web page and have not spoken with people who own one. It appears on their web page that their control software is written for Windows.

From their web site.

"For FlexRadio Systems products that would be an Intel or AMD based personal computer and a recent Microsoft Windows operating system such as XP or Vista. FlexRadio PowerSDR is the Windows based SDR software from FlexRadio Systems that is the second part of the computer/SDR software combination."

People have written their own Linux versions ???

The FairTax is effectively a replacement of the compliance costs that are already built in to every product and service you buy. The luxury tax would have been a tax on top of that.

That determines the prebate, not one's income.

It doesn't. Nor does it need to. It only needs to figure what the cost of essential goods and services are for a family of X number of people. A family of four that makes $100,000 requires the same essential goods and services as a family of four that makes $50,000.

Not sure I follow. If taxpayer A makes less than taxpayer B, assuming both buy the exact same thing then taxpayer A is always going to pay more of a percentage of their income for buying something.

Correct. Again as it should. That's how the prebate is determined.

>There is also nothing there that prevents it > from becoming another convoluted mess. Congress can fuck up a bowling > ball.

Yes, congress can fuck up a bowling ball. In fact, the first implementation of our current tax system was just a handful of progressive tax brackets (several flat taxes if you will), with no exemptions, no deductions, etc. And look what happened. There is no reason to believe a flat tax would wind up going back to the convoluted mess we have now. Plus, you would still have a tax code, the IRS, the 16th Amendment, compliance costs, and on and on and on. Under the FairTax the tax code – gone, IRS – gone, 16th Amendment – gone, compliance costs – gone.

That said, congress can raise the FairTax rate just as it could raise the flat tax rate or can and does raise the income tax rate. The current income tax is effectively hidden. It's just taken every paycheck and I bet 99% of workers don't even know how much is being taken out every week. Out of sight out of mind. They just accept that government takes it. Purposely designed that way by government. The FairTax is highly visible (displayed on your receipt) and there is only one tax rate. Changing that will be harder for congress to do. Why? Because the FairTax affects EVERYBODY. The income tax does not. Right now, almost 50% of workers pay no federal income tax. It's easy for them to say raise taxes on the top 50% that actually pay. Raising the FairTax means raising it on them too. Good luck to any politician trying that.

Not could be…would be. There would be no federal filing. But, to your larger point, the FairTax is a replacement to the federal income tax, not state income taxes. Federal taxes are what is at issue here. So, what would you rather do on 4/15? File federal, state and local tax forms; or just a state and local?

And once the FairTax is implemented none of that is withheld from your paycheck. With the exception of state and/or local withholding you keep 100% of your check. So, the payroll tax that is now effectively incorporated into the FairTax is paid by you only when you buy a new good or service. It's not automatically withheld from your pay. YOU decide when to pay it. Not the government. So, where's the downside to that?

You are not accounting for the removal of the 23% built in costs that YOU ARE ALREADY PAYING on every good and service that you buy (that government doesn't even get, by the way – just wasted dollars). When those built in costs go away you are back to the same price. See my previous example.

Nope. The item that costs $100 today will still cost $100. Here's why. The built in compliance costs are, on average, 23%. Take that away and your $100 now costs $77 (which already include the state and city taxes you mention). Replace those compliance costs with the FairTax and you are back to $100.

It was never about the system. Both socialism and capitalism can work. Libya is one example our criminal public servants are attacking, it had/has free medical for all, and free education for all, right up to the PhD levels ... it was/is not in massive debt and had, until now, escaped the problems we are all staring at ...

It can not be allowed to stand, a glaring jewel in the middle of war/poverty torn Africa and standing as an example to America.

While Qaddafi could certainly be a much better head of state, his system WAS benefiting people, I think this is the real danger to our criminals in charge of our government.

There is no humanitarian reason we are in Libya. The recent finding that Libya actually has 5x the oil reserves we thought it had is one. Stealing the gold is another, Libya was not in massive debt to the world banks -- this is another.

When we are done in Libya, someone, after a bit, should go ask the common person in the street if their lives are better. I'll just bet they will find themselves in deep doo-doo to match ours.

Well, we were all given creator granted and unalienable rights, mentions a creator (God) and that sentence even includes examples:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." -- from The Declaration of Independence.

The plans which obama represents are not his, they are the plans of the bush administration just carried on down the path further.

The next president will simply pick up these plans and carry them further. An examination of history will quickly show this has been happening since the assassination of Kennedy.

I would bet on it ...

Nope. It is a fair tax based on income. It is very simple, but, apparently, you still can't understand it. ;)

Well, you're wrong again, as usual. From the National Cancer Institute:

"The rates for new cancer cases and deaths for all cancers combined continued to decline in the United States..."

And while we are on the subject, you DO realize that other things can cause lung cancer besides cigarettes, like smog, radon and industrial pollution. Finally, it has CLEARLY been demonstrated time and again that smoking DOES cause lung cancer. Thus an intelligent person would conclude that reducing smoking (by taxes, education or whatever other means), will reduce lung cancer. The obvious conclusion is that you are not an intelligent person.

"Government worthless jobs"?

You mean those government employees don't buy houses, goods and services and contribute to the economy? They aren't taxpayers? Would you rather they be on welfare or unemployment?

Wrong? Maybe.

However, it is even MORE wrong for a fool to get on an airplane with a bomb in his skivvies.

No, I don't like the searches either, but I like it a whole lot more than getting blown to Kingdom Come.

It's a sad commentary on the age we live in, but sometimes we have to choose between the lesser of two evils.

Final thought...if a bomber did make it on board a plane and killed everyone, you can take it to the bank that people would be positively howling "How could this happen? Why didn't you catch this guy?"

Sorry, folks. It's the age we live in and you can't have it both ways. Searches or get blown up.

Pick ONE.

Not quite since those compliance costs are not the same revenue source as the income tax. For your Fair Tax to work, that revenue source from income needs to be added.....so it isn't simply the 'before' costs added to the price of purchase.

The luxury

I think you meant to say "wouldn't". Anyway, there is no reason to believe that a Fair Tax wouldn't either.

Plus, you would still have a tax code,

So are the costs contained in the Fair Tax. I saw no provision for showing them.

It's just taken every

That would effectively be the same with the Fair Tax. You would have it taken out on every purchase but no indication of what all was in it in what amounts.

They just accept > that government takes it.

Same with your sales tax.

Purposely designed that way by government.
> The FairTax is highly visible (displayed on your receipt) and there is

That isn't the problem. Taxpayers DO know what is in their income tax.
They do not know what portion of that Fair Tax is the replacement for income tax, what portion is corporate taxes, what portion is government taxes for whatever purpose when Congress changes the percentage of the Fair Tax.

Changing that will be harder for congress to do.

The only folks who would pay no federal income tax under my proposal would be those who income was below the federally declared poverty line for a family of four and EVERYBODY gets that one and only deduction.

No, it isn't or Obama would have done it in lieu of extending the Bush

As does raising the income tax percentages or do you think politicians

Which isn't done with state and local taxes anyway. They currently get used as a deduction on federal income tax, but even though there is no federal income tax, they still need to do state taxes. All they have saved is entering a number.

But, to

Which is what I said.

Federal taxes are what is at issue

When I do my federal taxes, TurboTax, for example, also does my state taxes. The extra time for the state tax is about 5 minutes.

My point was that it was still there. You just don't see it or really know how much it is.

Knwing what is in it and how much each entity is. For example, assume your percentage of 23%. Now, certain corporate taxes get changed. Your Fair Tax rate has to change to cover that. So now, this year it is 24.5%.
How does the consumer know which changed.....the income tax portion, the corporate portion, the FICA portion, the whatever portion?

Yes, I am and it isn't 23% or the Fair Tax could not be 23% and cover all those costs plus the amount currently from income taxes or FICA.

FWIW, all costs of doing business are placed in the price of the product or service that is produced. Anyone who doesn't understand that won't understand either your Fair Tax or my flat income tax proposal.

When
> those built in costs go away you are back to the same price.

Not really. You have added additional taxes to that proposal in the form on income tax replacement and FICA and federal sales taxes which were part of certain purchases.

I'm not confused, it's about recruiting businesses to be the involuntary arm of immigration law enforcement.

If the government passed a law allowing business owners to shoot and kill illegal aliens for breaking the law, maybe it would be a bit more popular...

We get less, but his home state gets none. Same thing you are saying, just a difference of degree.

We saw the same thing when they passed some taxes on luxury boats in the 80s. I was in Florida at the time and the boat manufactuing business took a big hit as did the Carolinas.

Bingo!. The French sold a lot of yachts for that reason.

That's why we have elections.

No. You are VERY confused.

Business must NOT use/manufacture/sell/etc. products which are harmful to consumers -- American citizens.

Hiring illegal aliens is just a harmful action against American citizens
-- i.e., consumes resources necessary to the health and well being of Americans.

A responsible business should have been observing the safety of American, above all else, all along.

This is just making them shoulder their responsibilities, since their respect for common morals and ethics fell short ... a shame they must be forced to do the right thing.

I don't think we can cut enough and get the folks reelected we want in there. Too many people are stuck to too many entitlements for those to be drastically cut.....nibbled at and cut over time, yes.....but not all at once. Medicare, for example, is forecast by the Medicare Trust folks to hit a cost of $931B in the next 10 years. Medicaid will double, and SS will go up by 70%.

Here are the newsgroups you keep cross-posting your political posts to:

rec.radio.shortwave, alt.conspiracy, talk.politics.guns, alt.fan.rush-limbaugh, alt.rush-limbaugh

All but rec.radio.shortwave are political forums where your messages seem appropriate. RRS, however, is a newsgroup dealing with shortwave radio and broadcasting. Please delete rec.radio.shortwave from your list of newsgroups where you make so many daily political posts.

Though I can't recall you ever making a truly Shortwave-related post, they would certainly be welcome. Do you need a receiver? Let me know if you do.

Gotcha. However, if there were no illegal aliens in the US, IOW, if the law was enforced and the borders were secured, there would be no reason to put the onus on businesses.

I realize this is a "chicken-or-the-egg" argument, but the same group of folks that want to clamp down on businesses and hold them responsible for illegals is the group that sues states to take the teeth out of anti-illegal alien laws.

My point is that politicians treat illegal aliens like the third rail and generally won't do shit to stop them streaming over the border like cockroaches. They can only be tough against businesses, not criminals...

Interesting, so you think that real problem is the "enticement" to break the law, and not the breaking of the law?

If a thousand people dropped their wallets, and I found them, it would still be the right thing to return the wallets with all which was in them, to the owners. NOT to remove anything as a "finders fee" and then drop them in a post office box.

As I said, it is a shame we are being forced to force them to do the right thing -- I seem to remember a time when they would have done it, obey the law, without even having to be asked twice.

If you know a way which will "entice" them to obey all laws, let me know, all which has been tried seems to have failed.

However, all that said, the crimes of the federal government, in NOT securing the borders, have been noted and needs to be brought to justice, also ...

JS

Somebody has to be able to adjust tax rates... If not Congress then who?

As law makers have to

In a dream world. Unfortunately, in this one, what one set sees and luxuries, the other side sees as entitlements.

If we, as a

Look at the hullabaloo over modifying SS and Medicare and tell me with a straight face that the people will vote for money to provide necessary services and will not vote for money that aren't. Particularly when that opinion of what is on what side of the line is all over the place.

Yep, but look at the above and you can see why a direct democracy won't work.

Well, SOB, maybe there is an advantage to getting ahead and busting ass to do so. You might no longer have to live paycheck to paycheck on a substance living condition.

Still doesn't establish that the burden is any less for the wealthy individual. Unless you think everyone would be living like a burger flipper.
Do you?

Yeah, you shouldn't post political threads on rec.radio.shortwave.

It's for Shortwave enthusiasts.

Luke

Hey mike. I'm in the market for a good portable shortwave.

I got a CC Crane Co. Portable Pocket Shortwave. I'm not crazy about it.

I use to have a Grundig YB400PE. I loved that shortwave.

Can you find me a YB400PE??

There is no good reason why we should be involved in any of these foreign conflicts at all. If it's proven that someone is planning to attack us, it would be a justification, but why would anyone attack us unless we got involved in their conflict?

And there are damn good reasons why we should keep out of the Libyan and other conflicts in that region and all over the world. It costs billions of dollars. It leads one side or the other to retaliate against us, costing us literally trillions of dollars to protect Americans against terrorism.

Why are we involved? A couple of likely reasons: Politicians love power; they like interfering in events all over the world; politicians depend for money and votes on groups that have a special interest in getting us involved in foreign affairs.

But I maintain that further taxation takes money out of the hands of the producer class and further injures the economy so that higher rates will return lower revenues.

There is simply no rational way to tax us out of this problem!

Seriously how much more can we afford to take out of the private economy? $1 trillion, $2 trillion? $4 trillion?

The only way to do it is DRASTIC spending reductions and DRASTIC tax cuts so as to allow the producer class to keep it's money and be able to spend it. Unless people are buying things and generating demand it just can't happen. And more and more people will become dependent on the government. More people will be living off of fewer people. There is no possible way that that is a return to prosperity, no matter what the Marxists beleive.

Clearly there are other issues. Offshoring jobs in particular is very toxic. If you move the jobs overseas, then people here don't work. People not working means they can't buy what they need or want. No growth. I know what I'm talking about I'm a developer and the number of jobs going to India and the foreigners being brought in to work cheaper in essentially captive jobs is killing domestic programmers and developers. And it isn't that we are overpriced. Some of the offers I've seen recently have been downright insulting for someone with as much experience as I have.

Also, over regulation takes it's toll. A couple out in Missouri fined 10s of thousands for selling rabbits without a license, Amish being attacked like Waco for selling milk (for God's sake!) to people who apparently know the "risks" and are more than happy to balance that with the benefits, Boeing being told they can't build a plant in North Carolina becuase the UNIONS don't like it? Fuck me! What has this country come to?

Drastic spending cuts aren't just about stopping the hemorrhaging of debt but to kill the federal behemoth which is (delibertately in my opinion) stifling every bit of creativity and entrepreneurship.

Good God, I tried to start a business back in teh 90s, just me and my computer doing development on the side, in my home office. Not only did the fed and state want thier cut the fucking county had thier greedy paws out for a piece of the action. I think I ended up owing more in taxes than I got to keep. What the fuck sense does that make?

Why? Why should the government need any more than say 10% of the private sector, except in case of war maybe, and probably not even then?

Why should the government be entitled to any more than 10% of the private sector?

Which is why we need high capacity magazines.

Look the future will have to take of itself. All we can do is fix what is wrong now. The problem is to many people will not even publicly acknowledge there is a problem, which in my mind calls into question thier sanity.

No it doesn’t need to be added. It’s already part of what you are paying anyway. Here’s a very simplified example:

Product costs $100, broken down as follows:

Under current system
- wholesale = $50
- compliance costs = $23
- sales and other taxes = $27
- Grand total = $100

Under the FairTax
- wholesale = $50
- compliance costs = - $23
- FairTax = $23
- sales and other taxes = $27
- Grand total = $100

That, or direct deposit to your bank account. The infrastructure is already set to do this for any number of government programs so implementation is not difficult. Well, we are talking government here

And under that system you are taxed on what you earn AND what you spend. Under the FairTax you are taxed ONLY on what you spend.

From the FAQ: All valid Social Security cardholders who are U.S. residents receive a monthly prebate equivalent to the FairTax paid on essential goods and services, also known as the poverty level expenditures. The prebate is paid in advance, in equal installments each month. The size of the prebate is determined by the Department of Health & Human Services' poverty level guideline multiplied by the tax rate. This is a well-accepted, long-used poverty-level calculation that includes food, clothing, shelter, transportation, medical care, etc.

Sent via check or direct deposit.

Oh, and with regard to the first paragraph if you aren't legal you don't get the prebate, but you still pay the tax. Think illegals. Or, how about the drug dealer who pays no income tax at all on his "earnings". The government currently get no, zero, nada, zilch, income tax from him. But, does Joe Criminal buy nice cars, clothes, electronics, houses, etc? Guess what? Now he's paying the FairTax on that. How about the tourist who comes to the US for a pleasure trip? Does the government get any income tax from them? Nope. Do they buy a lot of goodies while here? Yup. Get the picture now?

Yes, you are correct. Agreed, but the reasons I laid out make it far harder to do than the current tax code or even the flat tax which still would have all the nonsense that goes along with our current code.

The costs contained in the FariTax are just a replacement for income taxes. That's the whole point.

The receipt would have a line item that states “FairTax: 23%” with the applicable dollar amount. Better yet, you only have to look at that line item when you make a purchase. And, you only have to look at that line item when you purchase a new item. Buy a used car? No FairTax. Used bike? No FairTax.

Sure, we’re all hostage to what the government shovels on us. But, again, you pay income tax no matter what. You have no choice. With the FairTax you have a choice. And, to the extent that you need to buy necessities of life you get the prebate.

I couldn’t disagree more. Go ahead and ask the next person you see that you know how much was withheld from their last paycheck. Bet they don’t know.

So what? What they do know is that the FairTax replaces the income tax. They no longer have to file. They no longer have to keep records, see accountants, worry about deductions, exemptions, audits and so on. Instead, all they do is buy a product and that’s it.

Fine. You still have in place the 16th Amendment, the IRS, compliance, record keeping, accountants, fear of audits. Then you have people that pay no income taxes, as I already mentioned, such as criminals, tourists, illegals, those paid in cash.

Have you seen the most recent tax stats? Nearly 50% of wage earners pay nothing in federal income taxes. That’s the highest it has ever been since the implementation of the income tax. This class warfare thing is in all out mode…and it’s working.

No, but I say again, you still have in place the 16th Amendment, the IRS, compliance, record keeping, accountants, fear of audits. Then you have people that pay no income taxes, as I already mentioned, such as criminals, tourists, illegals, those paid in cash.

But, they are still filing federal forms and worrying about deductions. Why bother doing that when all you have to do is… well….nothing! Well, except buy a good or service. And even then you don't have to file anything and no concerns about deductions.

Thanks for making another case for the FairTax. You said "When you do your federal taxes". How about implement the FairTax and not do them at all? I know I'd rather just have to worry about doing my state and local taxes.

How much did TurboTax cost you? $50, $60 maybe? Wouldn't it have been nice to spend that $$$ on something else rather than complying with the federal tax code?

It is still there because the FairTax replaces it. We're not talking about doing away with government collecting revenue. We're talking about the mechanism for how it is collected. This is so much simpler than the current system or even a one size fits all flat tax.

I've already talked about changing the rate and how easy (or not so) that would be. Do you really think people care what has changed?
What they care is that an item that costs $100 under the current system still costs $100 under the new system. And if they buy it used, they don't even care.

The 23% does account for it. This tax plan is the most widely researched tax plan in the history of the planet. Economists and businessmen smarter than me have examined it inside and out. The 23%
revenue neutral.

Yeah, really. What has been added replaces the compliance costs that Laugh if you will. I see that you won't be convinced. All I know is we have an opportunity in front of us to repeal the 16th amendment, the IRS, the tax code and all the regulatory crap that goes with it (and woudl remain under a flat tax) and replace it with a national sales tax that you pay when you want to. It's revenue neutral and it's fair. All I can say is go read Boortz and Linder's book. You may not change your mind but you will be fully informed.

The Department of Health & Human Services' poverty level guidelines tel us that. This is a well-accepted, long-used poverty-level calculation that includes food, clothing, shelter, transportation,

I refer to your math.

wholesale = $50
compliance costs = - $23
FairTax = $23
sales and other taxes = $27

Unless they changed the rules of math by Congressionl decree that's $123.

And isn't it just remarkable that "poverty level" in the US would be considered middle class in most of the world?

I listen to beacons and low baud rate digital for radio sport. I listen to International broadcasters for music and culture. The static doesn't enhance that experience. There are people here who have been listening for 40 years or more, and they still haven't HEARD a word.

You can refer to my math, in return I will refer to your reading comprehension. Was there something about "- $23" (read minus $23) that you didn't get? I guess the example wasn't simple enough for

Of course it does. It is NOT part of that 23% you keep saying is already paid in product cost or the product taxes, etc. were actually less than 23%. What you have is this:

Product selling price
Product cost
Corporate taxes
Inventory taxes
Excise taxes

Now subtract the bottom three from the product selling price.

Now you have:

Product selling price
Product cost
- Corporate taxes
- Inventory taxes
- Excise taxes

Now add those to a Fair Tax

Corporate taxes
Inventory taxes
Excise taxes

Now you need to add in the tax portion that was covered by federal income taxes. You now have:

Corporate taxes
Inventory taxes
Excise taxes
The revenue from income taxes
Revenue from FICA

You can't subract 23% from a product, add more stuff to it and add it back and still have 23%.

It's already part of what you are Wrong. Under the flat tax system, you are taxed separately on what you earn and what you spend. With Fair Tax, you are taxed on what everyone earns and the product costs but it is all in one tax in lieu of being separate.

Read that. I was asking how and you seem to have answered that earlier when you said it could be in the form of a check or a deposit to one's account.

The size of the prebate is determined by the Department of

You answered that earlier. My point was that the FAQ doesn't say that.
It says you get it but not how.

I already figured that out.

I don't think you get the whole point. At least not in your examples. You cannot subract a percentage from a cost, add things to it and put it back in place at the same percentage.

One reason is that most used stuff is purchased directly from the seller.
There is no one who in the middle to act as a collection point for that tax. Not a lot of used stuff is taxed on sale in the current market.

Yep, but you need to take a closer look at how you present the figures or learn more about them. You cannot subtract x from y, add z to x and have x be the same amount as it was before.

Are you trying to tell us that the compliance costs are the same as the entire income tax revenue? That would be interesting since about 45% of that federal revenue is individual income tax, 36% is payroll taxes, 12% is corporate taxes (which you did put into your Fair Tax number), 3% excise taxes and 4% from other.

And I say your number is wrong. Compliance costs are NOT equal to 45% of the entire federal budget. Now, Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid are about 40% and both are expected to increase in cost over the next ten years. Social Security by 70%. Medicare by 77% and Medicaid by 99%.

I simply don't feel that you can subtract product costs with taxes, add income tax revenue to that, put the product costs back in and have the

Let's try it this way using YOUR figures above.

Originally

Wholesale - $50
Compliance costs - $23
Sales and other taxes - $27

Total product cost $100

Federal income tax revenue is a separate item.

Wholesale - %50
Compliance Costs - <$23>
Sales and other taxes - <$27>

Total product cost now - $50

Federal income tax revenue still a separate item.

Wholesale - $50
Add sales and other taxes -$27
Add Fair Tax - $23
Add money for loss of income tax revenue - $whatever

Oooops, it now comes to more than the original $100 since that revenue is not a separate item anymore.

I agree with that but is that injury more or less than what we already have. It is like putting a bandage on a wound. It works, it does good, helps healing but it often hurts when removed.

> There is simply no rational way to tax us out of this problem!

Nor is there a rational way to cut spending far enough to get us out of this problem. Ergo, the solution needs to combine both.....more taxes for certain areas and pretty damn heavy cost cutting in certain areas.

> Seriously how much more can we afford to take out of the private

Our debt is now equal to our GNP. They both stand at about $14.3T and we are borrowing $0.40 on the dollar. We can't keep doing that and maintain our status on borrowing percentages.

> The only way to do it is DRASTIC spending reductions and DRASTIC tax

Excuse me, but with DRASTIC tax cuts, how do you intend to keep programs alive AND pay down the debt. That is like maxing out your credit cards and then leaving your job as an engineer to flip burgers for miminum wage. The revenue needs to keep coming. In fact the more revenue, the faster we can pay down that debt.

And there is really no way to simply cut, cut, cut and cut like many others believe.

Then the laws need to be changed to fix that. We need to find a way to tax offshore income rather than just leave it float in the wind. We need to find ways to make our labor more viable here than in France or China.

And I have been in hardware development and quite familiar with outsourcing on both materials and labor. It is a practice that became paramount due to competition and our laws.

And it isn't that we are overpriced. Some of the Regulation needs to make sense.....nuch of what you stated above doesn't.

Yes, I know it is there, but we need to change that however deregulating everything is not the answer either.

Don't worry, it won't. Without a viable private sector, the public one cannot survive.

Interesting. I owned a computor consulting business and had no problems like that. I had costs for a business license and they made me a taxing point for state sales taxes....but that was about it.

No, he thinks that the fair tax will replace them as they will no longer be needed. He mainly needs to use more accurate numbers and understand that he cannot subtract 23% from an item's cost, add stuff to it and still have it be 23% when he puts it back in place. Either his first 23% is in error or the second one is.

Really? Do you honestly think even 1/3 or spending could stand honest Constitutional scrutiny. Maybe it's time we stop acting like children and

No, but unless the bleeding stops or slows significantly... Look, I no longer beleive the bullshit about raising taxes/cutting spending. I became poltically aware in the 80s with the line of shit the Democrats fed Reagan

Yeah the county wanted a license fee and piece of the action. I figured after the feds, state and they got through with me it simply wasn't worth

Where do you come up with 1/3? SS is 20%, Medicare/Medicaid and other safety net programs are another 35%, Defense is 20% and the current debt in 2010 was 6%. That consumes 81% of the budget. That only leaves 19% for EVERYTHING else and all those costs are climbing.

Of course we can cut back on Defense (which includes Homeland Security) by taking the National Guard off the border (they are coming off anyway by next year) and closing down many of our bases overseas, not buying any more warships, dropping the F-35 and bringing our boys home from Iraq and Afghanistan.

Obama's minions think they can get $500B out Medicare/Medicaid over the next 10 years by elminating fraud and waste, but no one is really stating where that waste and fraud is much less how to remove it. The Dems aren't going to go for Ryan's plan although they haven't produced one of their own......and won't until after the 2012 election. They'd rather use Ryan's plan to badmouth the GOP to the voters.

True, but for now, the Republicans control the House where all spending bills originate. Do you think we can wait until Republicans control all three again? Look what happened last time. It is never really good when the same party controls both Houses and the presidency.

You have to keep some of them going. You simply can't put grannie on an ice floe and send her out to sea, no matter how much you'd like to. Yes, there is a lot of folks receiving Medicaid and unemployment and welfare that shouldn't. But shooting everyone on those programs isn't the answer either. I'd love to say that as a people we need to assume responsibility for those who are less fortunate than us, but if that had occurred earlier in our history, we wouldn't have the programs (and their attendant problems) that we do today.

Sorry, but when cutting many of the things going on, balls and conscience don't play well together. That human nature. We tend to say, hell, yes, let's cut those programs those worthless assholes are on, but don't you dare touch anything I may need, want or use.

That 'special interest bullshit' is part of capitalism. Not in theory but in actuality. As are taxes and regulations.

Not like that everywhere. When things get overregulated, businesses

Let's look at it this way for a moment.

I wouldn't trust you with our government and making all the laws and decisions. Would you trust me with it? Didn't think so. So here we are at an impasse or having to work together when it is just two of us.
There are over 300 million here. And out of that 300 million would come millions of ideas.....some good, some bad. None of them quickly settled.

IOW, you're jumping into the middle of a conversation without knowing what it's about.

Free hint: It's about gross income, so "legitimate expenses" doesn't alter the taxable amount, only the poverty level deduction is allowed for that purpose.

So I suggest you go back and find out what it is you missed so that you can try to have some appearance of knowing what is being discussed.

False assumption.

Any number of variables factor in to what goods and services would be essential and what it would cost for those goods and services.

All you are doing is picking an "average" which would reward some family by paying them for non-essential goods and services and punishing others by failing to reimburse them valid and legitimated costs for essential goods and services.

IOW, overall most people wouldn't balance out, only the small minority right at and around the "average".

Sorry, but how can you totally eliminate compliance costs, since there would still be costs to complying with the FairTax as well as the sales and other taxes.

As such simply saying it's not going to cost anything to comply with the tax laws is an utterly false assumption.

Indeed since NOTHING else has changed the compliance costs would, at minimum, stay the same, and given that the need to comply with the FairTax would require some expense, the compliance cost would likely increase.

So in reality, what would happen would be more like:

Under the FairTax
- wholesale = $50
- compliance costs = $26
- FairTax = $23
- sales and other taxes = $27
- Grand total = $126

Yep, notice nothing else has changed, but according to him, suddenly it will cost NOTHING to comply with the still existing conditions, and will cost nothing additional to comply with the new tax imposed.

As such his numbers are BS.

Yep, and HOW exactly do you assume that compliance with sales and other taxes will suddenly be reduced to zero, when they will still need to comply and that it will cost absolutely NOTHING to comply with the additional FairTax imposed?

That seems to be his, utterly unrealistic, assertion.

Please note "lung cancer" =/= "all cancer"

Try again when you're not trying to compare apples and oranges.

So where is your valid, credible and meaning(ful) data?

Are you going to plonk yourself as well?

Yes, a genius friend of mine is claiming that there are time travelers coming back from the future and attempting to halt any actions/paths which will avert the coming bad times. His description of them sounds very much like a future version of the shadow government we see in action, behind the curtain, today.

It is interesting to hear him explain it. When I ask him, "Do you really believe this?" He answers, "Tell me a better explanation which would account for it ..."

He says Jamestown, Waco, the middle east, Libya, etc. are all being done on purpose to influence the trend of events -- by time travelers.

We do absolutely agree that Guinness is the best dark beer ...

JS

Yep, I never said they would be eliminated, but priorities BOTH sides can agree on would slowly get the bulk of the available resources.

Some would. A lot would not.

Would you vote to raise taxes for unneeded services?

Oh, I don't know. If you could earmark your check for the specific programs you felt the money should go to.....and undecided funds would be allocated by Congress to plug any holes.....Hmmm... possible.

Congress could drop it, or it could be brought up before the people as a referendum during a general election.

Congress can only, but only the People can vote to increase it.

Which is why we need to get the Congress' power to arbitrarily increase taxes and/or borrow money under control.

Spending control will tend to come from that, and if we can tighten the noose until spending, programs, and how it is allocated become if not acceptable at least bearable then we will have made great strides. The first step, IMO, is cutting down the flow of money to them so that the rest MUST be addressed.

Actually, it is exactly the same mechanism which sound uses to transverse the liquid air which it uses to transverse the liquid water.

The same waves you see on the surface of the pond transverse the water below, and the air above. In air, you cannot see them, and the frequency of the waves is below human hearing.

I mean, grab a book on physics, it is like, DUH!

Sound cannot transverse space, a vacuum. However, radio waves do. Both sound waves and radio waves need a media to transverse or they cannot travel a distance. The media in space is the ether (or, aether.)
Einstein called it the "gravitational aether."

A google search on gravitational aether and Einstein will give one much to digest ...

Negative value of 14 .4 is highly unusual for an IQ level . But in this newsgroup- you never know . . .

We really can't say that the people in Libya will be better off when they replace their current leadership. The country is economically strong and the people have money. In the past the leadership has done bad things to us and to the Brits, but it has become more moderate since then. It does have more oil than we thought then.

We spend a large fortune on border patrols. Each year we spend more.
That money spent isn't without cost to businesses.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

Pretty sure that ship has long since sailed. Our politicians and corporations have already given away the farm, but kept all the profits from future crops. The GOP in some states is trying to go one better to destroy unions so that people just have to take what the employer wants to give them..

Not by time travelers but the CIA.They were testing their brainwashing tecnique in jones town,waco and at the spahn Ranch.Jim Jones,Charles Manson and David Koresh were all victims of project monarch and the CIA stormed the compounds when they were finished with the expiriments.

There is no such thing as Time Travelers.Orwells time machine was a hoax to get the herd in the receptive mode!E=MCsquared. is not relitive to time travel this is some more of Kakus bulshit same as gray matter and blackholes!

The Government put the idiot Einstein in the mix to railroad the scientist into thinking this formula was more important than free energy.So they started testing his theory.

The funny part is is that its not reative to anything. Einstein simply noticed all the mathmatical formulas for energy all had reative components in figuring energy but with out using all the specific criteria you cant make any kind of energy at all. So with that being said you cant travel faster than time nor slower than time. because his theory is not a formula at all it is a simple observation in comparing energy equasions!

Einstien could not pass the first IQ Test designed to test adalesant kids.His IQ has never been published because he was a Government idiot sent to baffle the herd!

$22 million in research says otherwise. On average, every good and service you buy contains 23% in embedded costs. Those will go away as market forces take hold. That 23% is replaced by the FairTax. Guys, this isn't that hard.

Oops, you are figuring it out incorrectly. Why are you removing sales and other taxes? By those I am talking about state and local taxes.
So, let's try this again.

Current
- Wholesale: $50
- Add sales and other (local/city) taxes: $27
- Compliance costs: $23
- Total: $100

FairTax
- Wholesale: $50
- Add sales and other (local/city) taxes: $27
- FairTax: $23
- Total: $100

You can review my other posts to account for all the other benefits.

You need to understand what compliance costs actually are. They are the costs associated with complying with the federal income tax on wages, regressive payroll taxes , the federal income tax on wages, i.e. measuring, tracking, sheltering, documenting, and filing our annual income.. If those taxes are gone then just what exactly is there left to comply with and how does that cost any money?
Compliance costs of the income and payroll tax are like an anchor holding back economic growth. We have nothing to show for the billions spent each year on compliance. Hey, if you like having to spend money on accountant, buy tax programs, spend countless hours figuring out what you owe, have your income withheld and being taxed on what you earn rather than what you spend, then there's nothing I can say that will change your mind. I prefer a better way.

Eclipse LED digital ballasts are more efficient, quieter, cooler, and softer on the bulb. Digital ballasts do not have any of the usual transformers, capacitors or igniters; instead these ballasts have electronic circuitry to do the same job, more efficiently. What might take a standard coil/magnetic ballast 680-700 watts to fire a standard 600 watt bulb, may only take a digital ballast only 600-620 watts to fire the same bulb to the same brightness.

What's to comply with on a sales tax? Really, make your case? As for the numbers, as I said, economists have looked at this. The research is out there. I don't care if you summarily dismiss it. But, at least take an objective look at the plan rather than gut reactions to it. Of course, if you like the current tax system then god bless you.

It's an assumption that is made by the DHH. It applies to everyobody. No winners or losers (as our current tax code does).

OK, I WILL ask you.

The Wall Street Journal, who is not a big fan of Obama, says he was born in the USA.

So, here is the question I'm asking you:

What does Cuhulin know that the WSJ investigative reporters don't?????

WrognTurnJoe, YOU don't tell peopel what happened. YOU tell people what the kooky voices in your head tell you to say!

Hint: Your claims are physically impossible; the official findings resolve every question, the FACT that you cannot NAME ONE THING in the NIST report that is incorrect shows you are an idiot.

The FairTax replaces federal income taxes including personal, estate, gift, capital gains, alternative minimum, Social Security, Medicare, self-employment, and corporate taxes. The proper tax rate has been carefully worked out; 23 percent does the job of: (1) raising the same amount of federal funds as are raised by the current system, (2) paying the universal rebate. I can't make it any more simple than this. Economists and businesspeople have spent $22M researching this. There is nothing more I can tell you to convince you. You need to read the book and the web site.

Uh… okay. Mince words if you want. The reality is under a flat tax you are still paying twice. And, you are paying 23% in embedded wasted costs. Under the FairTax you are paying once. What I'm hearing you say is that you would still rather be taxed two separate times as well as having your income taken from you when the government wants it as opposed to when you want to give it to them, continue to comply with a messy tax code and on and on and on. If that's what you want then there will never be any convincing you otherwise.

The web site doesn't, the law does.

The Fair Tax Act of 2005, Part XIX

`SEC. 304. REBATE MECHANISM.

`(c) When Rebates Mailed- Rebates shall be mailed on or before the first business day of the month for which the rebate is being provided.

`(d) Smartcards and Direct Electronic Deposit Permissible- The Social Security Administration may provide rebates in the form of smartcards that carry cash balances in their memory for use in making purchases at retail establishments or by direct electronic deposit.

So each registered family (or family of one perhaps) will get their rebate checks in the mail, via direct deposit, or via a smartcard/debit card account arrangement. I would probably use direct deposit myself. Paper checks are slow, and I think a separate debit card from my regular check card is not very convenient (just another card to have to safeguard and another account to watch).

Really? That's all they have to do? You make it sound so easy. As I already said everybody…I repeat…everybody pays this tax. No exemptions, no deductions. Everyone pays it. Now, you tell me what politician in his right mind is going to risk election or re-election by raising the rate. If they do they are a one term rep or senator. I'm not saying it's impossible, but it is much harder.

Take the current state of affairs. Obama and the leftwing redistributionists are all in favor of raising taxes on the so called rich. They are at no real risk of trying to do that because a) the "rich" are a small percentage of the voting base that actually pay fed income taxes; and b) their (Obama and the rest of the left) voting base is predominantly a group that pays little to no fed income tax. So, if you are a voter asked to vote for someone who will raise taxes on someone else who the hell are you going to vote for?!?!? Conversely, if that same politician says they are going to raise taxes on YOU who do you think they are going to vote for.

Used stuff is not taxed under the FairTax because it has already been taxed once already. It's unfair to tax it again. The tax collector for new stuff is the same entity that it is now, the seller.

You have the choice to purchase. It's only then that you pay the tax. Wouldn't you rather have that choice than no choice to be taxed on your income? I mean, really, I just don't get the line of reasoning otherwise.

You just described another reason for the FairTax. Actually two reasons. First, under the current, or flat, tax you still have to file. Not so with the FairTax. Then those who use CPA's have to…well… use CPA's to figure out the tax burden. Wouldn't you rather a) not have to file anything; and b) spend the money you just spent on a CPA on something else ore productive…like a good round of golf on April 15 instead of working on your taxes :-)

Do you control the government taking money out of your check every other week? Do you control the fact that you have to file on 4/15?

As for me here's how I would utilize my control. If I don't want a good or service I won't buy it. There's my control. That's all I have to worry about. And, I can do what many people have done and move to a no income tax state like FL and the like.

Maybe you weren't but many companies are which is a big reason why there is an embedded 23% cost in every item you buy. Still, the end effect is still the same. You spent $X on a tax program or CPA. You can pay your "fair share", whatever that means, when you buy goods and services. If you aren't sure what fair share is and just want to be sure then you can do more by buying more goods and services. Not only do you fund the federal government, but you also help the economy.

Okay, you say the numbers are wrong. Economic research says otherwise. I can't convince you otherwise. You go for the flat tax Fair enough. You're a skeptic and I appreciate that. But, the research is on the website and in the book. At least you are willing to debate this reasonably. I really do hope you read the book and learn about it because there are things there that the web site or I can't do justice to. As for myself, I am not against a flat tax. I think it would be better than our current convoluted system. I just happen to think there is a better system. It will be tough going because repealing the 16th would be the single most largest transfer of power from government to the people in the history of this country. The tax code is nothing but a social engineering and vote buying tool. That power is not easily given up. Then again, a couple hundred years ago no one really gave a democratic republic much of a chance either.

Let me ask you a real simple question. What cost do you incur to pay a sales tax at the point of purchase?

The buyer ?
The buyer is paying for the cost which is built into the sale price
The seller ?
The seller has the cost of managing and reporting the taxes that were captured at the point of sale.
The government ?
The government has the cost of processing and verifying the reports from the sellers. As well as running investigations/prosecutions where it's suspected that the sellers are not reporting/paying all the captured taxes.

There's no compliance cost to him with paying the sales tax. They just pay it. Unlike the fed income tax compliance means CPAs, TurboTax, manuals, etc.

merchants and sellers are reimbursed for those costs. But, you knew

Which they already do.

There's no compliance cost to him with paying the sales tax. They just pay it. Unlike the fed income tax compliance means CPAs, TurboTax, manuals, etc.

Since the seller has to pass on his costs to the buyer through his pricing, it's always the buyer/end user who pays for all the costs...

> The seller ?

Oh, you mean like they already do with state sales taxes? By the way, merchants and sellers are reimbursed for those costs. But, you knew that already, didn't you?

There is still the cost of pushing all that paper around

It's a REAL cost. And it's passed on to the customer through the pricing of the products sold.

> The government ?
> The government has the cost of processing and verifying the reports from

Which they already do.
Agreed.
The only real benefit of a VAT is that it shifts the taxation process to a different venue.
Unfortunately governments have a tendency not to give up existing revenue streams even when an "alternate" one is put in place.

Actually, this is correct. Whenever I've listened to CVC, it's never been the kind of self-serving fatalistic stuff you get on, for example, Family Radio or 1Africa or WHRI. It's always been designed to give young people hope in their future. Try the English language CVC BCs out of Zambia sometime and see what I mean.

And I already know that. Tell me something new like how you subtract 23% from product costs, add it back in and then add personal income taxes, estate taxes, gift taxes, capital gains taxes, althernative minimum taxes, FICA, Medicare Taxes, self employment taxes, corporate taxes and compliance costs. So how can you end up with the same number?

Either the original 23% you take out is wrong or the 23% you put back in is wrong.

No, what you are really hearing me say is that you cannot remove 23% from a product cost, add it back in, add a bunch of stuff and end up with the same number. Either you take out a different percentage than 23% or you add in a different percentage than 23%. Which is it? All you have really removed from the cost of the product is compliance costs for the old system. You also added compliance costs for the new Fair Tax and all those other taxes aforementioned. You cannot convine me that all those taxes are the same value as the old compliance costs.

I would bet that it is simply that there is no real way to collect it since it is not through a retailer.

No, it isn't. There is a difference between a seller (who can your

The bottom line is that folks will purchase where they think they get the best deal. Will the added tax make a difference? Most likely if it is 23%. Hell, people squawk now about a 10% sales tax and your Fair Tax only replaces the federal portion of that tax....not all of it.

You effectively pay no federal tax on necessities. You still pay state and local sales taxes. So now your product will cost:

Product cost
Compliance costs
Profits along the way
State and city taxes
Fair tax.

The first three remain about the same.

I still have to file state taxes which if I am not doing federal taxes will have to be done from scratch so state tax preparation will be more costly and take longer. The IRS still needs to send out all the forms like 1099s, W2s, etc.. The IRS still needs to track all state and local taxes although not for federal tax purposes but to establish poverty level wages, etc.

Then those who use CPA's have > to�well� use CPA's to figure out the tax burden. Wouldn't you rather Fair Tax still only applies to federal taxes...not all taxes.

and b) spend the money you just spent on

Two problems.....one, that hidden cost probably isn't 23% (or if you think it is post your cite) and companies pass on all costs that they have to pay. They cannot do it any other way and still maintain as low a product cost as they can and make a profit. Companies still pay taxes to the letter of the law. What they do is the same thing I do, and, I assume, you do....go through your taxes to ensure that you are complying with the law and not paying anymore than you have to.

Still, the end

Then post that research. The research you have mentioned is that the revenue is neutral. That is NOT the same as product costs yet you keep posting product cost examples to show your point. My point is that one of the two numbers you use is wrong. Either the original 23% (that would be the one I would suspect) or the 23% for the Tax. Since the tax number came from the research by the Fair Tax group and is slated to be revenue neutral, I would assume that that number is probably correct. It is your example of subtracting out 23%, removing some costs from it, adding a lot more cost into it and putting it back in as 23% that is suspect.

I can't convince you otherwise. You go for the flat tax

The research on the website addresses revenue neutrality. It does not address product cost other than to say prices should fall and then wages may rise. It even states that the change will be subject to market forces.....however, in your example, you keep using a constant number that suspiciously just happens to equal the Fair Tax. As I noted before, it is not the 23% Fair Tax number I am questioning it is the number you use to subtract from product cost and try to show the total product cost to be the same as before. That is what I don't believe and have stated several times why.

At least you are willing Excuse me, but if there is no income tax, then the 16th Amendment becomes as useless as tits on a boar hog just like the 3rd Amendment.

Well I wouldn't put grannie on asn ice flow out to see. I'd like to see more people take responsibility for thier families.

Didn't want to make a big deal of it, but we're moving back to VA and moving in with my mother-in-law. She's been having "issues" lately and my wife wants to be the one to take care of her. Fortuneately she has a big house, not as big as ours here, but in some ways better.

So I'm putting my money where my mouth is.

And it's not that people didn't do the right thing, it's that they let themselvesd be hustled that they weren't needed and Uncle Sugar would do it for them.

There is no reason to continue bad policy because it's been in place for a long time if it appears that the policy is destructive.

Yep, have a big party on the mall and burn all the laws and regs made since

To who's benefit? It simply exacerbates the problem.

In the faq, the research shows that a 23% Fair tax would be revenue neutral not cost neutral. It also states that product costs will vary and will be subject to market forces. Here is the actual statement from the FAQ as regards those costs:

"Americans who produce goods and earn wages must pay significant tax and compliance costs under the current federal income tax. These taxes and costs both reduce after-tax wages and profits and are then passed on to the consumers of those goods and services in the form of price increases.
When the FairTax removes income, capital gains, payroll, and estate and gift taxes, the pre-FairTax prices of these goods and services will fall.
The removal of these hidden taxes may also allow wages to rise. Exactly how much prices will fall and wages will rise depends on market forces.
For example, in a profession with many jobs and too few to fill them, wages will likely increase more than in fields where there are too many employees and not enough jobs."

IOW, they are not claiming or showing 23% being taken from the overall product cost to begin with.

On average, every good and > service you buy contains 23% in embedded costs. Those will go away as > market forces take hold. That 23% is replaced by the FairTax. Guys, > this isn't that hard.

Nothing personal, but it is also YOUR statement, not theirs. They do compare the 23% in Fair tax to the amount of income tax paid by the consumer.

Perhaps you can tell us, without crawling up the ass of the merchants the feds could verify exactly what they sold.

Without an audit how will they know what sales were? How do you know that merchant x who claims $1,000,000 in sales and collected $230,000 in sales tax didn't actually collect say $1,500,000 And simple pocket the $115,000 in sales tax?

None of which addresses my questions

What should the government really be doing?
What are government's real cost, how much do we need to pay?

I think one can do the same thing with spending proposals as we would like to see in regulatory proposals.

A. What problem is being fixed or addressed?
B. What measurement system is going to be used or put in place to ensure that result is occurring?
C. How long will that measurement be given to show results.
D. If measurement shows no gain or the law doesn't work, law will automatically sunset after stated period of time.

That should apply to all legislation.

Yes. We need to cut down on pure partisanship from both sides.

Not unless it could be shown that the service is actually needed and what

That would be possible. From what I understand, you can send checks to the IRS to be directed to specific uses.

I agree that one of the major problems is that any extra monies never go to paying down the debt but to some new entitlement or enrichment of an old one that arises simply because there is some extra money. It is like a family that has maxed out credit cards finding a hundred dollar bill and going to the movies with it rather than sending it to Visa or Mastercard.

There are also state compliance costs associated with state income taxes for employees, inventory taxes, license renewals, etc.. Fair tax does nothing about them. In addition you also have some compliance taxes for the operation of the Fair Tax....someone has to pay it.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

Have you been watching the news lately? Hows that all working out for say, Ryan? Meanwhile, Obama and his merry band of socialists are calling for tax increases on the rich. That, although not workable, is going over far better than the Ryan plan - which I happen to agree

Perhaps. But, the analysis doesn't even get to that point. The reason has to do with inherent unfairness of taxing that which has already been taxed.

So, you're saying it's more expensive to do state tax alone as opposed to state and federal taxes? Taxes will not take longer because the current state of exemptions, deductions, etc. are taken into account at the federal level, not the state. If you don't have a federal income tax you don't have all the forms and administration that goes with it.

What evasion are you talking about? The FairTax makes evasion harder. Right now, the only person that can evade income taxes is you by filing a false claim or the like. To evade the FairTax the seller has to help you do that. You think they are going to risk their butts to save you? Yeah....right.

Every year...after I spend hours keeping records of donation slips, 1099's, expenses, slogging through turbotax (which I had to buy), deductions, exemptions, etc. All that when I could have simply avoided it by doing what I do every day anyway, which is go shopping.

But, how do you get to no income tax? It doesn't mysteriously go away just because the FairTax has been implemented. It has to be repealed. Otherwise, you have the fairtax and the income tax.

- I thought Greenville still had some transmissions?

Greenville, NC had three VOA Sites and IIRC two of the VOA Sites are now Closed.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Greenville,_North_Carolina#Voice_of_America.2FIBB

There is talk of Closing the last VOA Site; as not needed; since the Cold War is long over.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Voice_of_America

The Long Slow Death of the VOA : VOA at Bethany, OH is closed.
VOA at Delano, CA is closed.
VOA at Dixon, CA is closed.
VOA at Greenville, NC is 2/3rds closed.
VOA in Hawaii is closed.
VOA in Okinawa is closed.
VOA in Costa Rica is closed.
VOA in Belize is closed.
VOA in Liberia is closed.

and... the USA is getting out of Winning the Hearts and Minds of the Citizens of The World. -while-China is On-the-Rise.
Russia is Resurging.
Venezuela is On-the-Rise.

and... the Voice of America is now only a faint distant whisper . . .

Amen.

The future looks like the past, indebted servitude, 3rd world status citizens, high death/disease rate from inability to access proper medical, poor retirement in old age, no rights under the way being paved by the patriot act, etc.

It is enough to make one fear it is too late -- I think that is the plan.

WOW? Not you, but what idiot decided to use "digital" to describe an electronic ballast.

Digital computers deal with numbers. Digital systems deal with binary numbers (perhaps, soon "trinary" numbers as the 3-state electronics become available.)

There is nothing digital about fluorescent ballasts, except the name.

Let's get rid of a lot crap and get down to the chase and the point I am trying to make.

You keep stating that there will be 23% of the product cost removed when Fair Tax is implemented, therefore the 23% of the Fair Tax will simply bring the product back to the same price. You say that research has shown that.

Now, let's look at the FAQ. It says that the Fair Tax will be revenue neutral. It does NOT say it will be cost neutral. That is YOUR claim, not theirs. Revenue neutral means that the amount of tax revenue produced by the Fair Tax will be the same as current practice provide. Cost neutral would indicate that cost of the product to the public would not change. A statement that they do not make.

Here is what the FAIR Tax FAQ says:

"Does the FairTax rate need to be much higher to be revenue neutral?

The proper tax rate has been carefully worked out; 23 percent does the job of: (1) raising the same amount of federal funds as are raised by the current system, (2) paying the universal rebate, and (3) paying the collection fees to retailers and state governments. Unlike some other proposals, this rate has been independently confirmed by several different, nonpartisan institutions across the country. Detailed calculations are available from FairTax.org. "

Note that it says, "..revenue neutral."

Let's try another spot:

"How does the FairTax affect wages and prices?

Americans who produce goods and earn wages must pay significant tax and compliance costs under the current federal income tax. These taxes and costs both reduce after-tax wages and profits and are then passed on to the consumers of those goods and services in the form of price increases.

When the FairTax removes income, capital gains, payroll, and estate and gift taxes, the pre-FairTax prices of these goods and services will fall. The removal of these hidden taxes may also allow wages to rise. Exactly how much prices will fall and wages will rise depends on market forces. For example, in a profession with many jobs and too few to fill them, wages will likely increase more than in fields where there are too many employees and not enough jobs."

Note again that it does not name a percentage for any cost reduction. It says it will vary depending on market forces.

Here is another spot:

Since the FairTax plan is revenue neutral, the same amount of resources is extracted from the economy as is extracted under current law. These funds are, however, extracted in a less economically damaging way. Every known economic projection shows the economy doing better, often much better, under the FairTax.
Because the economy grows, is more efficient and more productive, that means investment, wages, and consumption are higher than they are under the income tax."

Again, it says "revenue neutral" not cost neutral. The research that they claim the 23% number on is for revenue neutrality. That number has nothing to do with product prices or costs.

IOW, there is nothing in the fact that says that prices will remain the same although you kept claiming it in your examples. The fact is that the overall cost of the product, including the Fair Tax may be quite different than it was before. It may be lower or it may be higher. The FAQ makes no claims in either direction.

This is what I meant when I was talking about your price comparisons when I said one of the numbers had to be wrong. You cannot take 23% away from an item, add more stuff to it and put it back and have the item retain the same cost. Even the research that you cited says "revenue neutral" meaning it produces the same amount of revenue to the federal government as the various taxes did prior to the Fair Tax.

And mine is that we will have no real fix to the situation unless we address BOTH sides of it. That would be revenues and costs.

I am sure that it will over the next many months.

The General Welfare clause was a point of contention between Madison and Hamilton. Madison's view in Federalist 41 was that it was seen simply as shorthand for the enumerated powers listed in ArtI(8). Jefferson agreed with Madison but Hamilton disagreed. Hamilton felt that it was an independent power. The Supreme Court sided with Hamilton in 1936 They said that Congress had the power to spend tax moneys "for public purposes....not limited by the direct grants of legislative power found in the Constitution. (Butler v US, 297 US 1 - 1936).

That decision permitted the Court to sustain the Social Security Act, a federal law that provides for the general welfare but does not fit within the enumerated powers. (Steward Machine Co v Davis, 301 US 548 - 1937).

Unfortunately, it also gave a backdoor to taxing to uphold an annual federal tax on firearms dealers. "We are not free to speculate as to the motives which moved Congress to impose it, or as to the extent to which it may operate to restrict the activities taxed.....[S}ince it operates as a tax, it is withing the national taxing power." (Sonzinsky v US, 300 US 506 - 1937)

Hmmmm, I think there was some of both. Those who still helped their families and those who relied on the government to do so.

That is part of it, isn't it. Deciding just what is destructive and what isn't. That is part of the distance between liberals and conservatives.

Interesting but I think that both taxes and regulation are necessary.
The problem is applying them where they do the most good so we don't need so much of them.

The point is that those costs are still there. They were somewhat amortized when combined with federal taxation but even if that goes away, the mechanisms of collecting those taxes don't.

WOW? Not you, but what idiot decided to use "digital" to describe an electronic ballast.

Digital computers deal with numbers. Digital systems deal with binary numbers (perhaps, soon "trinary" numbers as the 3-state electronics become available.)

There is nothing digital about fluorescent ballasts, except the name.

Regards,
JS

That's OK... the shill isn't talking about fluorescent ballasts, they're talking about HID ballasts (mercury vapor, high pressure sodium, metal halide). Digital technology could be used for these by using "steppers" to ramp the voltage up and down based upon current detection.

Yes it does. The 23% is the embedded compliance "costs". I'll try this one last time. 23% of every item you buy is composed embedded costs passed on in the price of the product associated with compliance of paying federal income and payroll taxes, including personal, gift, estate, capital gains, alternative minimum, Social Security/Medicare, self-employment, and corporate taxes. Those are "costs". When the FairTax is implemented those costs go away. I won't re-hash why.
But, those costs go away and are replaced by the FairTax. In it's simplest terms it removes 23% of embedded compliance costs, then turns right around and adds 23% tax. Thus, the cost if the item is the same. I can't make it any more simple then that. If you can't figure that out then maybe you need to stay with the current tax system.

While you are technically correct, about a LED being mentioned in the original post, the difference between sodium/mercury-vapor and fluorescent BALLAST is minimal, to an engineer.

Voltage step-up/step-down, or even wave shape has nothing to do with "digital."

While not absolutely necessary, a digital wave shape will be of a square wave, however ramp and even sine can be handled with processing. And, a simple flip-flop circuit can generate a square wave, process this though a current regulator, then a voltage regulator and you, basically, have your "digital ballast", but it has nothing to do with anything truly "digital."

The name "digital" is more of a marketing scam than anything else it its' use in describing the ballast, kinda like "solid state" (a pencil is solid state!), "state of the art" ("new" is simply relative), "space-age" (products developed after successful space flight), etc.

1) of or relating to the fingers or toes <digital dexterity>

2) done with a finger

3) of, relating to, or using calculation by numerical methods or by discrete units

4) of, relating to, or being data in the form of especially binary digits <digital images> ; especially : of, relating to, or employing digital communications signals  ï¿½ compare analog 2

5) providing a readout in numerical digits

6) relating to an audio recording method in which sound waves are represented digitally (as on magnetic tape) so that in the recording wow and flutter are eliminated and background noise is reduced

7) electronic <digital devices>; also : characterized by electronic and especially computerized technology <the digital age>

And, my hand is digital!!! ROFLOL

In Jones' favor, he does have the gritty voice and imposing demeanor ideal for propagandist talk radio. Perhaps someday he will realize that only global nuclear war will ever solve the problem, because the problem is "human" nature. "Humans" are the spawn of evil itself. Unless the genetic engineers can figure out a way to splice the "evil gene" completely out of the human genome, and cause all evil "humans" to go extinct without dragging the newly engineered non-evil humans down with them, then there is no other way to solve the problem but to obliterate the earth and destroy all life on land, air, and sea.

One other distinct possibility is that the year 2012 really will bring the end of time. Hard to know if it will, but the world does look like it is headed off a cliff. It's almost June 2011. Is it possible the this world has about a year and a half before it's all over? That's not long to wait. The big difference is that this "2012" prediction was made many thousands of years ago by astronomers with an amazing comprehension of the subject matter -- no religious fanatics or totally incompetent doomsday cult clowns like "Harold Camping" or "Jim Jones" to muddy the waters with their delusional twaddle.

I am not asking why. I am asking where are you pulling that number from?

> But, those costs go away and are replaced by the FairTax. In it's

The adding of 23% I got since that is the percentage of the Fair Tax. I am not questioning that. I am questioning where you got the costs of compliance and that other stuff adding up to 23% of the product cost. It isn't in the FAQ as far as I have seen.

Thus, the cost if the item is the > same. I can't make it any more simple then that. If you can't figure

Or you need to explain where you are getting that particular number from.
You have yet to do that.

Bottom line seems to be that either you don't understand what I am asking or you can't say where you got the number from either. Again, it is not the 23% for the Fair tax, I am asking about. It is your reference to all those costs totaling 23% BEFORE taking them away from the overall cost of the product. Those are existing costs you keep totaling to 23% and have nothing to do with the Fair Tax percentage.

If you need further explanation of what I am asking.....

They are for state and local reasons. The only thing that went away was the federal requirement. Some of those are also state costs and they have to remain in place along with the compliance costs that they incur.
That hasn't changed.

Cite, that compliance costs will drop to zero despite no changes in the need for compliance, plus the addition of the need to comply with a new tax.

Ok, HOW exactly are these embedded costs going to just go away?

Do you think cost of compliance with EPA regulations is going to be eliminated simply because you add yet another tax?

Excuse me, but how can you arbitrarily eliminate compliance costs?

You don't think that they will STILL need to comply with the sales tax laws and other local/city laws for taxation?

Nevermind costs for workman's comp, unemployeement insurance, EPA requirements, OSHA requirements, etc, etc, etc

How exactly do you just poof magically disappear all these costs?

There are only two possible answers I can think of:

1) The worst imbecilic-idiot-morons in government are honestly attempting correct fixes and a return to a decent America.

-- or --

2) The government is tightly controlled by a shadow government criminal element and this is exactly their plan, to weaken and gain absolute police state control over all American citizens.

But then, the solution to both is the same, imprison or hang either the imbecilic-idiot-morons or imprison the crooks!

Ok, this should be fun.

Plus workman's comp regulations, EPA regulations, OSHA regulations, Unemployment insurance regulations, Fire regulations, Building regulations, parking regulations, etc, etc, etc, handling income tax, is but a SMALL part of this process.

Further, you have ignored the costs associated with handling the FairTax.
You don't think that's going to cost something?

> If those taxes are gone then just what exactly is > there left to comply with and how does that cost any money?

Clearly YOU don't understand what is in those compliance costs. You simply assume it's all federal tax related, and you assume that replacing those federal taxes with another federal tax would eliminate all costs to comply with federal tax requirements.

EPA isn't going to be there anymore?

OSHA isn't going to be there anymore?

Workman's Comp isn't going to be there anymore?

Unemployment Benefits aren't going to be there anymore?

The need to comply with state/local tax requirements aren't going to be there anymore?

You just can't wave your magic wand and claim all these things are going away when they aren't.

Actually, there are winners and losers. Those above the average will be one, and those below the other.

See, unless the compensation EXACTLY equals their specific needs and expenses for essential goods and services then they will either win or lose depending on which side of the "average" they fall on.

Seems to me that when challenged on your assumptions, your argument always seems to boil down to "Does not" usually with a pout.

Nice assertion, to bad you can't prove it.

Even the simplistic examples you're produced show flaws in the system that you just ignore and/or gloss over.

I'll bet you my life's savings that the world won't end in 2012, despite what the ancient "astronomers" say. No matter what, I cannot lose! :-D

Well let's see, I would have to come up with a price of the cumulative total of all items for which sales tax is required. Which means checking the results from multiple registers, documenting those on government forms, calculating the specific taxes due federal, state and/or local governments, then making payment for the sales tax due to the federal, state and local governments.

So is it without cost?

Hardly.

Will that go away simply because I collect a larger federal sales tax instead of a smaller sales tax?

Nope, will still require all the same overhead, the only difference would be the amount I had to sent in to the federal government.

So, now let me ask you a question, why do you assume compliance costs will go to zero, and can you give me a specific cite that proves this will occur?

Is the outer shell glass, or something more durable, like a polymer?
With glass, if the inside gets broken, there's a pretty good chance the outside cover would also be broken by the same trauma.

Sure there is since he pays ALL the compliance costs, even those of the store.

It's an hidden cost, just like there are hidden taxes, but in the end the consumer pays for it all.

Even if so, doesn't alter anything. That they pay the collection costs via the tax collected doesn't alter ANYTHING.

Since that cost is simply buried in the tax in the form of a higher tax rate.

Effective tax rate - 20%
compliance costs for the retailer - 3%
Fairtax = 23%

or we can not pay the retailed for his costs

Tax rate - 20%
Retailers compliance cost - 3%
Tax and costs passed on to the consumer - 23%

Either way, the government collects the same revenue, and the costs of compliance are still passed on to the consumer.
The ONLY difference is where that cost is added in to the final price.

Indeed, I would tend to think the government model (first) would incur a higher final cost since there would be yet more forms to fillout & process, more people to handle those forms and more transfers of money back and forth. All of which means MORE expense, not less.

Maybe, but nothing there would prevent overspending, even massive overspending as long as they can show some sort of results.

True, results are good, but there is a limit to how much we can afford no matter how much a lot of it might benefit people.

We'll all be here come election day.

I had this conversation with someone at the FBO at the Lansing airport. She was going on at how all these forces come to alignment as the earth passes through the galactic disc, to the southern side of the galaxy, which is supposed to take place mid 2012.

Truth is, that all the forces that will be at play at that moment are currently at play, with the only differences being the angles at which they affect the Earth. Right now, that angle is so small as to be insignificant. The idea that these natural forces will spike to a level capable of ripping the Earth to gravel at the moment of alignment is absurd.

Still, there are those who still don't understand why we're still here after the last planetary alignment.

These persons are easy pray for the unscrupulous.

It is Glass -but- not 'thin' Light Bulb Glass
It is Thicker and More Durable like the Glass on a Halogen Bulb

So where exactly in the information presented by either of those links would he find that information?

Care to quote for me the relevant sections that you assertion would address his question?

I know that....however the mechanism for complying with those federal laws is also used in some cases for state laws. Since those are not addressed by the Fair Tax, they need to remain in place. When that occurs, that cost cannot be removed.

That part I agree with that the Fair Tax only addresses federal concerns. However, if that compliance mechanism for federal taxes and costs is also used for state taxes and costs, it and its accompanying costs cannot be removed.

And where is the information that those costs total up to 23% of the product cost. Tis awfully suspicious that the costs removed equal the new costs put in when the new costs include all that federal tax revenue that is currently being gathered.

Personal income tax - 45%
Payroll Taxes - 36%
Corporate income tax - 12%
Excise taxes - 3%
Other - 4%

http://tinyurl.com/6sdrrr

Some of those costs were already in the product cost so they didn't go away.

I have no problem with the Fair Tax being calculated at 23% to gather all that stuff in. The problem I have is the claim that the cost for that stuff was 23% of the original product cost. That is the only way to add 23% tax and come up with the original cost for the product.

I went. Now which particular papers did you get that 23% of product cost from? The only references I find to that 23% tax is for revenue neutrality, which is the amount of taxes the federal government gets through all those taxes.....not product cost. The closest cost to 23% I see is the 22% cost for just tax compliances which are the costs of collecting all those taxes including FICA and personal income tax, not the product cost. Some of which will not be going away will not be going away as the Fair Tax has its compliance costs also so that they have to be included in the Fair Tax rate.

Perhaps we are misunderstanding each other. It seems we are addressing two different things instead of being on the same page.

I found the papers by clicking on "About the Fair Tax". That takes you to a page where research is listed on the left hand side. Clicking on "Research Papers" takes you to a page where the there are headings listed. Click on the heading marked, "Taxes and Tax Reform". That will give you another page where the papers are listed by subject.

Yews, he should have given you a link to get there. Since he didn't, I will. Here it is:

http://tinyurl.com/3nr4da6

That should be the link he should have given you. Then he should have stated which of those papers he got his data from.

That is the same thing I have been asking him for. I know how the 23% figure for the Fair Tax got calculated, I just want to know where that 23% figure he claims is in the cost of all products is worked out. Where did THAT number come from. Methinks he is misreading something..

Yep, and just because you pull some bit or piece someone said elsewhere doesn't mean they agree and/or support your claims in the product you put together using that bit or piece.

Nor am I going to dig around trying to find out whether this is the case or not, it's up to him to show me that what he claims is true. It's not my job to figure out if it is.

surronds?

Illiterates of the world UNTIE!

I'm sorry, I can't understand what you wrote, let alone tell you something about "Einstiens ELECTRON".

Please write in English. I don't read Babbleloonian.

The 'process' seems to be that the Start-Phase is a small Halogen Igniter placed in the center of the larger CFL Spiral Tube [Empty Hollow] :
After the Instant-On Warm-Up the Second-Phase CFL takes over for long-term Low Power Light but Quality Light Output.

Most CFLs 'Fail' due to their Electronics :
Not the CFL Tube itself : This may be a way to reduce these Failures and Improve the over-all Service Life of CFLs.

I run UV sterilizers on all my aquariums, to kill organisms in the water, they have quartz sleeves to keep the water from the UV lamp (quartz has very high transmission efficiency to UV rays), inside the housing.

Trust me, while the quartz does seem tougher than the glass bulb, they break, in my opinion, too easily -- I have broken two over 5 years ...

Decades ago, in high school, I remember a physics instructor with a special type of pyrex glass tube, he drove an eight penny nail into a board with it -- it was a hollow tube and quite shocking to watch ... the tube did not even chip.

I have often wondered why I have not seen this glass, more, in different uses -- the only other time I have seen this glass was when working for lawrence livermore labs -- glass viewing ports, where explosive experiments were carried on behind them.

During the 1970s the coors beer bottles used to be able to withstand a surprising amount of abuse without breaking, I don't know if they still possess that quality or not ... often, when tossed out of a moving car they would just bounce, skip and slide along a highway without shattering/breaking.

JS

Our landlord had CFL bulbs installed a year ago in all apartments. They lasted about 6 months before they dimmed too much or just stopped working.

Rob : Time Is Money {Labor Costs}

Six Months of 24/7 Operation is 4000+ Hours
The Average old 100W Incandescent Light Bulb last ~1000 Hours -do-the-math-

One Trip Up-the-Ladder 1-Hours Labor
-or- Four Trips Up-the-Ladder 4-Hours Labor
To change all the Light Bulbs in an Apartment every 6-Months. -count-the-labor-savings-

CFLs are 99 Cents at the local Market : 60W
& 75W & 100W CFL Bulbs for a 'Buck' :o)

The local Dollar-Tree Store has 3-Way 30-70-100
Watt old Incandescent Light Bulbs for $1 a 'Buck'.

The Kitchen's Mushroom* CFLs are 'On' 12-Hours per Day and Last about a Year. There are 18
CFL's in 2-Arrays of 9-Each {2-Switched Circuits}
The Arrays are at 10-Feet and require a 9-Foot Step-Ladder to get at them. It's 'nice' to have to do that once-a-year.

With all due respect, what the hell are you talking about? I never claimed these things would go away. Go read the fairtax site so you can come in to this discussion with at least a tacit understanding of it.

You don't arbitraritly eliminate them. Look at it in its simplest terms. If you don't have an income tax do you then have to comply with paying income tax?

Sure. That's at the state and local level. The fairtax deals with compliance of FEDERAL taxes. Don't even bring state and local into this.

Good, I will never mind them because they have no bearing on the FairTax.

But you are perfectly fine with maintaining a system that currently falls well short of funding the federal government?

I see you support Herman Cain. You do realize he supports the FairTax don't you? I suspect a businessman like him has many of the same questions all of you have been pelting me with. And I bet he understand what compliance costs are and how they affect business.
And through all that he supports the FairTax. You still going to vote vote for him? I trust him far more than I do the likes of socialists like Obama. Cain will be getting my vote.

Wrongly titled the "Fair" tax should be labeled the "Unfair" tax.
Totally regressive it excuses the wealthiest among us.

The "Fair" tax, twisting the meaning of fair, is a sales tax and is therefore inherently regressive

Yes we need some taxes, America being a low tax nation

1. We need the bush,jr tax. This tax remains in force until bush,jr's unfunded wars are paid for.
2. We need to rescind the bush, jr tax cuts that have crippled our government.
3. We need to tax dividends, interest, and capital gains at the same rate as money earned by working.

You think that is my primary concern? if the government is not spending correctly then yes I want to starve it.

Everyone want to talk about taxes. How about we talk about excess, not Constitutional spending. How about we talk about what they should be doing and how much it should cost and then think about a tax system to support THAT amount, not create another tax system to raise the same amount of money and continue spending at the same rate.

I rarely if ever agree with any candidate 100%. However I do need to support one with my vote, I am not a believer in the idea that not voting "sends a message". If you don't vote you have effectively voted for the winner. I do not care for any of the old school Republicans and I despise Obama so i have to pick someone. Honestly, I might even support Ron Paul except that he is a little bit to blind to the importance of the military and that disengaging the way he wants to might be a little dangerous.

Sorry, but show me in Fairtax.org

In wiki anyone can claim anything about anyone. If your claims have merit then the organization itself will have said it.

Don't know if I do or don't nor does it matter in the least. What is clear you can't refute or address the point I presented.

I absolutely agree with you 100%. What I am discussing is merely tax reform, not spending reform. The fairtax is meant only to replace the current tax structure. Spending is a whole new ball of wax. And, it's there too that I also agree with Herman Cain. Dude, I'm on your side on that.

Yes, because most states have income tax and as such the bulk of those compliance costs will still be incurred whether there is money to be sent to the federal government or not.

Ah, but the compliance with them is largely based on the work needed for federal compliance, so eliminating the federal compliance doesn't eliminate the expense as you suggest but simply transfers the expense.

Based on what?

Because you say they aren't?

Given the tax and spend attitude, NO amount of taxation will feed the beast. Even under Clinton will tax increases and a massive increase in revenue due to a booming economy, the federal government still managed to invent new and wonderful ways to spend absolutely everything it got and still needed to borrow even more.

The problem is a lack of control on spending, not on the level of taxation.

Look, I said repeatedly that the fairtax replaces federal income taxes including personal, estate, gift, capital gains, alternative minimum, Social Security, Medicare, self-employment, and corporate taxes and the compliance costs associated with them. You come out of left field with this EPA and OSHA nonsense. It has no connection. It's like trying to prove a negative.

Well, fine lets figure out what the government needs to spend on and then create a system that provides that amount. As much as I dislike it, changing the system makes little sense if the end result is the same and you still need "prebates" for it to work. Changing over the tax system, at least for this government, would be an epic clusterfuck anyway.

The "Fair" tax is inherently unfair.

High earners are shield from the tax by the money they DON'T spend Cutting taxes on the wealthy has NEVER stimulated the economy. Taxing the hell out of them and putting the money directly into the economy will. We should go to a top rate of 98% and cut all tax loopholes and tax interest, dividend, and capital gains exactlyt he same as wages.

Exactly. That's why something like the FT is revenue neutral. It's a mechanism to maintain current levels of tax revenue. Controlling spending is a completely different issue.

And it's pointless going through the exercise of changing the collection method if spending doesn't change.

He beat Cancer. He'll beat Obama (who is just like cancer)

Remember Desert One, Carter 0? Ain't it sad to wish that Obama had as much ambition but being glad he doesn't knowing he doesn't have THAT much competence?

Eleventh Law of Leftist Debate:
It's Bush's fault.

> 3. We need to tax dividends, interest, and capital gains at the > same rate as money earned by working.

In the United States, individuals and corporations pay income tax on the net total of all their capital gains just as they do on other sorts of income. Capital gains are generally taxed at a preferential rate in comparison to ordinary income (26 U.S.C. §1(h)).

Capital Gains Taxation in the United States from 2003 forward Tax Rates:
2003-2012
Ordinary Income
Tax Rate: 35%
Short-term Capital
Gains Tax Rate: 35%
Long-term Capital
Gains Tax Rate: 15%

2013 –
Ordinary Income
Tax Rate: 39.6%
Short-term Capital
Gains Tax Rate: 39.6%
Long-term Capital
Gains Tax Rate: 20%

The reduced 15% tax rate on qualified dividends and long term capital gains, previously scheduled to expire in 2008, was extended through 2010 as a result of the Tax Reconciliation Act signed into law by President George W. Bush on May 17, 2006. This was extended through 2012 by President Barack Obama on Dec 17, 2010.

[Guess who was in power in the Congress _/and/_ the Presidency when the extension was passed in 2010: that's right; the DEMOCRATS!]

The United States is UNLIKE OTHER COUNTRIES in that its citizens are subject to U.S. tax regardless of where in the world they reside. U.S. citizens therefore find it difficult to take advantage of personal tax havens. U.S. law requires reporting of income from those accounts and failure to do so constitutes tax evasion. I am not biased one way or another, but simply presented the facts, as I have found them to be.

They aren't. Notice what it was for years after WWII when our economy was booming. Now look where it is. Does it seem to you that cutting taxes on the wealthy has stimulated the economy? Find someone to explain the numbers and squiggly lines to you.

As I have stated, and many times before this:

democans = republicrats.

If anyone thinks,that the change of party means any anything they are morons. Some shadow government is in control, it is with them the true battle will begin.

While trashing, dumping, ridding ourselves of their puppets is good, we need to hang the puppet masters along side of their puppets ...

Allowing the vast majority of wealth to stand idle in the rich elites' bank accounts drawing interest, or invested to generate them large profits which they keep score of -- like some sort of sick game, has never raised the standard of living nor produced a country you would Exactly.

The rest of us are are going to need "welfare" just to afford security guards so we are not killed for what we have!

Again, democans = republicrats.

At this time, there is NO difference between parties. They are both

YOu mean like this specific statement:

"Based on a study conducted by Dale Jorgenson, proponents state that production cost of domestic goods and services could decrease by approximately 22% on average after embedded tax costs are removed, leaving the sale nearly the same after taxes. The study concludes that producer prices would drop between 15% and 26% (depending on the type of good/service).[79] Jorgenson's research included all income and payroll taxes in the embedded tax estimation, which assumes employee take-home pay (net income) remains unchanged from pre-FairTax levels.[4][80] Price and wage changes after the FairTax would largely depend on the response of the Federal Reserve monetary authorities.[27][37][81] Non-accommodation of the money supply would suggest retail prices and take home pay stay the same—embedded taxes are replaced by the FairTax. Full accommodation would suggest prices and incomes rise by the exclusive rate (i.e. 30%)—embedded taxes become windfall gains. Partial accommodation would suggest a varying degree in-between.[27][81]"

Jorgenson is the author of a study that makes the above claim. He is also a proponent of his own form of taxing which is to tax income at different rates depending on whether they are work based or property based.

Now, let's look at the statement. The statement concludes that production costs would drop by an average of 22%. That could produce a product cost drop of 15 to 26% depending on the type of good or service. This is much more in line with what I have been saying. I asked you where you got your percentage from on product cost to purchase. After all, that is where the consumer comes in. That is not shown here nor is it shown in the Fair Tax FAQ.

This cost reduction shown here is on the actual product cost not the product's selling price. In the stream between the product cost and the selling price are factors like inventory taxes, state taxes, shipping and distribution costs, profit, etc.. That means that the selling price (which you use in your example) will not see a 23% drop. Even the FAQ that you kept referring me to only shows 23% as a factor in the Fair Tax to make the revenue to the federal government neutral.

So to make your example correct, you should say that removing these federal charges like corporate taxes on the product cost could make the selling price of the product drop although some of those costs will remain as the Fair Tax only addresses the federal portions. Adding in the Fair Tax at point of sale, keeps federal revenue neutral as regards federal taxes (including personal income tax revenue, FICA, corporate income taxes, etc.) It would give you a price not much higher than it was but you would have no federal income taxes, no corporate income taxes, and no FICA to pay. Those costs to you have been moved to the Fair Tax which is applied at the point of sale.

Now are we on the same page?

Actually, it evens some stuff out. As he has noted, it is a sales tax applied to purchases. The wealthy tend to purchase more items and ones with a higher cost than poor folk do. After all, how many poor folk purchase a 50' yacht from Broward Marine or Eggf Harbor? The tax is based on the selling price of an item and is the same on all items.

Ergo, those who buy more items or more expensive ones will pay more tax.

Don't let your money envy and class jealousy blind you, Sid.

And they don't. They state that lower product costs could lower the price of those products but do not define it. A figure close to what he claims is in some of the accompanying stuff, particularly in wiki. The number they use is an average of around 22% and it is applied to actual product cost, not selling price which is where Fair Tax is applied. Therefore even though the percentages are close, they are applied to different amounts so the result is different not the same as he had claimed.

That percentage is an average of 22% and it is on actual product cost not the product cost or selling price which is where the Fair Tax is applied.
The percentages could be exactly the same (they aren't) but if they are not applied to the same prices or costs, the answers will be different.

The assumption in your reference is that the reduction in actual product cost could (not would) reduce that product cost by some amount (a range starting at 15% is given). Since the Fair Tax is applied to selling price and not product cost and since it only addresses federal costs (and not state taxes, some other taxes like inventory or product markup for profit margin) the actual selling price will be quite different from product cost. It is not a wash as you try to indicate.

Plus the author of that study prefers his own plan for income taxes by basing the rates on whether that income is work based or property based.

The wealthy don't pay their fair share.
That's the problem.
Wealth is not taxed.
Interest is taxed at only 10% whereas, if your work for your money it can be taxed as high as 33% Raising their taxes will have them paying their fair share of the cost of government

In a way, yes. In another, no. Those are business costs associated with producing and selling a product. They are present and applied after the point where your cost saving on the actual product are taken, however they are are costs that businesses have and will pass on to the consumer. The only things the Fair Tax resolves are federal corporate costs due to taxation and are applied to the product cost to the manufacturer. Fair Tax does not address an corporate state taxes, distributions costs, profit, etc. Therefore the selling price of the product is far different from the product cost at the manufacturer's site. That is why the Fair Tax site does NOT claim any percentage reduction in the manufacturer's product cost but states that it could.

If a wealthy person makes $20 million dollars only that small portion he/she spends is taxed.
The unspent portion remains untaxed.
People who work at jobs are not granted such privileges
The "Fair" tax is inherently UNFAIR...it's a sales tax and is inherently regressive.

We have a good system that has been picked to pieces over the years.

The income to works.

It needs to have much of its giveaways removed.

I'm not poor.

I ride the tax gravy train same as you do.

10% tax on interest?

While those who work may pay up to 33% marginal tax.

Have you people no clue?

I suspect none of your have ever done a 1040.

The poor are another subject.

The middle class earner who just gets by and cannot save is taxed more heavily than a person making millions, who cannot possible spend all he/she earns.

The unspent portion is untaxed in your inherently unfair sales tax...Cleverly labeled a "Fair" tax it is UNFAIR.

This is true, but you haven't a clue why it's true! You just buy the

No. The problem is two fold. 1. taxation is not fairly done. 2. The fox is running the hen house when it comes to spending taxes.

> Wealth is not taxed.

So your idea is that one must pay a yearly fee for the privilege of keeping what you actually worked to earn. If you don't pay your "rent" on your propery, it gets taken (stolen) from you. (See first rule)

> Interest is taxed at only 10% whereas, if your work for your money it can be

There are two ideas here. One is that taxes should be fair. Say a fixed percentage of income, sales price etc.. The other is that tax rates can be manipulated to do social engineering. One can tax "needy" people less and "undesirable" people more to induce behavior in various directions. The problem is once again fairness. Who is setting the rules? Usually "needy" means the friends of those making rules and "undesirables" means enemies of those setting rules!

> Raising their taxes will have them paying their fair share of the cost of > government

Why just raise taxes? Why not kill them all and take everything they own to pay off the national debt? We are all pretty much getting away from the rule of law anyway. I'm sure all the "poor" will be for this plan.

Your text reminded me back to a time when I had first retired, gotten bored, and the wife and I began donating time at a local Catholic Social Services Center.

I worked as security, in the kitchen, cleaning the grounds, the "homeless library", etc., the wife the same, anywhere where we were needed in the center. I began to see "the homeless" more as "people" than I ever had in life ... but ...

After about a month, one of the priests came and took me and the wife to his office, he counseled us about our "attitudes" towards the homeless. I can see now, it didn't work, we didn't get it. In fact, at the time, I didn't even realize that I didn't get it, and thanked him for the "pep talk."

So, one day, the priest asked me if I would go along with a homeless man and his girlfriend and help them collect recyclables, this struck me as odd, but still, I consented, I had great respect for the priest ... the wife went to her normal chores at the center.

During the day we collected cans, plastic, metals, bottles, etc. from various dumpsters. They even found clothing they kept.

To make a long story short, at the end of that day, I was dead tired. When we turned in his "findings" he got a bit less than $50.00 dollars. It had taken us over 8 hrs. and was some of the hardest work I had ever done. My feet hurt, my back hurt, etc.

I finally "got" what the priest had been trying to tell me, it is harder to be homeless than to hold down a tough job. They don't choose to be homeless ...

Now, I am sure that some just "don't work" or are "lazy", but I will never have the same opinions I had before I had the opportunity to see the problem directly ... to see "the problem" first hand, up close and personal.

Now I see the difference between the "rich" and "the poor" as being a bit less significant ... if you doubt anything I have said here, help a homeless person out for a day ... be prepared to have your opinions changed!

Now, I certainly would NOT want to ever repeat that day, but oddly enough, I am grateful for the experience! The priest comes by now and then, and we have dinner together.

Regards,
JS

True, they pay more than that. It is the bottom 50% that don't pay their share.....they are the takers.

There is no cost of government in wealth. Only in providing the

There is a method in that Fair Tax for taking the regression out of it just like there is in my flat income proposal. You need to read a little further than just the first sentence.

The bushkultie doesn't know much, and doesn't know the difference, either:

"UPS and Computers

The letters stand for ï¿½uninterruptible power supplyï¿½ ï¿½ batteries ï¿½ not United Postal Serviceï¿½ which NIST actually confused ï¿½ and confuses! See this letter from NIST to the Enrico Manieri:"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

That's quite an error, too.

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind every occasion its enemies attack it.

"I would like to assure the world that I did not plan the recent attacks, which seems to have been planned by people for personal reasons," bin Laden's statement said."

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

Of course you hate America when you insist that those

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"If a group of people made a public statement saying that having a new Pearl Harbor would be the only way the public would support their agenda, and these same people were in positions that would allow them to conduct, permit or enable such an event when that event actually took place...would they deserve your suspicion? Well this is EXACTLY what happened. The very people with established motives for conducting an event like the one that took place on 9/11/2001 were responsible for national security when we had that most unlikely, unrealistic and implausible complete catastrophic failure of every single defense procedure in operation."

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Despite this warning, when the Japanese pilots of the 11th Air Fleet attacked Clark Field nine hours later, they caught two squadrons of B-17s lined up on the field and a number of

http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/brochures/pi/pi.htm

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Why did Roosevelt order the pacific fleet to relocate from the west coast to Hawaii in the summer of 1940? Why was the commander, Admiral Richardson, removed after complaining that Pearl Harbor didn't offer sufficient air or topedo defense?

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The mood of the country was a problem, and Roosevelt therefore resorted to subterfuge. He systematically and deliberately provoked the Japanese into attacking the United States. His real target was Hitler: Roosevelt expected the German dictator to abide by the Tripartite Pact and declare war on America, and hoped that Hitler's decision would be facilitated by a display of America's apparent vulnerability. Accordingly, even though Roosevelt was well aware of the impending attack on Pearl Harbor ..."

http://www.freerepublic.com/forum/a3a3522a943db.html

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the

Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

On August 8, 1945, after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Hoover wrote to Army and Navy Journal publisher Colonel John Callan O'Laughlin, "The use of the atomic bomb, with its

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,
"Based on a detailed investigation of all the facts, and supported by the testimony of the surviving Japanese leaders involved, it is the Survey's opinion that certainly prior to 31 December 1945, Japan would have surrendered even if atomic bombs had not been dropped, even if Russia had not entered the war, and even if no invasion had been planned or contemplated."

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

Since the situation is clearly recognized to be hopeless, large sections of the Japanese armed forces would not regard with disfavor an American request for capitulation even if the terms were hard...

As far as is known, Washington did nothing to pursue this opening. Later that month, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson almost capriciously dismissed three separate high-level recommendations from within the Roosevelt administration to activate peace negotiations. The proposals advocated signaling Japan that the U.S. was willing to consider the all-important retention of the emperor system; i.e., the U.S. would not insist upon "unconditional surrender"...

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

I agree to a point, but not all compliance costs will be eliminated.

Take Social Security, for example. While the tax collection aspect will be eliminated for employers, the requirement to report income to the Federal Government will not, since SS benefits are dependent on that information.

State income taxes have been mentioned in this thread, and before you say it, I know the Fair Tax deals with Federal taxes only. However, State income taxes rely on the Federal income tax framework, so there's bound to be some slop-over in compliance costs there. Perhaps this has been taken into consideration.

Also, as has been mentioned, administration (collection, reporting, and so on) of sales tax by business entities constitute a compliance cost. (If you have ever had to administer sales tax for a State, you'll know what I mean.) Perhaps this also has been taken into consideration.

No, they really aren't. After all, if it wasn't for the poor, how on earth would you define the rich?

Care to show your work.......Yes, he pays a bigger share of his earnings in taxes, but that is not due to tax rates.

Excuse me, but I am not proposing a sales tax nor am I supporting one.

That is the name that those who propose it put on it.

FWIW at least the flat tax could be adminstratively simpl, still to much personal information turned over to the fed, face it they will still "have" to know what you made so they can tell if youlied on your postcard.

But the clusterfuck involved in the VAT, adminstering it with the exceptions and "prebates" for low earners is just another giant government program waiting to spin out of control. And you'd still have to declare income to know if you qualified for the "prebates". never mind the sliding scale bullshit.

If i had to choose I would go with the flat tax as being more honest and open. With no real deductions the tax preparer leechs would have to get productive work, the IRS could be reduced considerably and then we would really debate how much the government "needs" and why. Now everyone scrambles for and whines about deductions, perfect for the politicians as an evasion for the real question.

We're to busy arguing about HOW we're being bled then why.

Er, um, mumble, no I won't say it.

OK, how about if we beat the politicians with it rather than wave it?

Herman Cain for President! http://hermancain.com/
If you don't support him you are a Racist!!
He beat Cancer. He'll beat Obama (who is just like cancer)

Remember Desert One, Carter 0? Ain't it sad to wish that Obama had as much ambition but being glad he doesn't knowing he doesn't have THAT much competence?

They already know based on information sent in and added to your W2 or

Although that is the only deduction or exception to it. .....currently.
There is no tax program that Congress can't fuck up over time.

> And you'd still

No, it isn't based on income. It is based on number of adults, one or two, in the home (think parents) and the number of dependents (think kids or grandparents, etc..)

> If i had to choose I would go with the flat tax as being more honest

As would I. None of it is hidden from view whereas with the Fair Tax, you really have no way of knowing just what is in it.

Field offices and all those folks could simply go away and find meaningful work somewhere.

Yep.

Then that would be the next problem to work on.......over spending.

Let me see if I understand this. Take a widget that sells for $100, and costs $90 to make ($10 profit). If the cost is reduced by 22% (the compliance costs), the cost to produce is now about $70. If you assume that the producer will keep the profit at $10, the selling price plus the 23% Fair Tax is a little over $98.

The profit assumption is debatable. If the widget produce say to himself, "Self, I use to sell this junk for $100 a pop, and make $10.
Now I can sell it for $90, and make $20! Sells for less, I make more

- I like it." Then he sets the selling price at $90. With the 23%
Fair Tax, the price is almost $111.

Is this what you mean, or am I off base?

I think the Fair Tax proposal that is in this debate bases its "prebates" on family size.

Yes. Tax the hell out of the wealthy an invest directly in the infrastructure then you stimulate the economy. Cutting taxes on the wealth to the ridiculously low rate it is now NEVER results in stimulating the economy.

Monica Pignotti is cursed.

Look at what happens to people who support her:

Eldon Braun: died.

Rob Clark: penis destroyed by a dominatrix.

Bruce Thyer: divorced.

Larry Sarner: discredited as a failed inventor.

Linda Rosa: bankrupt.

Emily Rosa: sexually abused by Penn Jillette.

Jean Mercer: fired from Psychology Today.

Amy Scobee: outed as a lesbian.

Michael Anestis: caught in prostitution sting.

Nancy Many: her book was banned in many US states and dropped from Amazon.

Eileen Gambrill: her research grant was cancelled.

Sally Satel: AEI is receiving demands for her dismissal.

Academic institutions have correctly seen that Monica Pignotti is, at best, a fringe figure. She can remain there, on the lunatic fringe, for as long as she likes. She is permanently barred from entering mainstream academia.

Institutions fear unfavorable publicity due to her antics. They are also wary of complaints from students about poor teaching, and the faculty of several leading schools of social work have voiced concerns about Pignotti’s legendary sexual misconduct.

Not quite. Assume a widget that sells for $100 and costs the retailer $90. That $90 is the cost to him. That is not the cost to make the product since it also contains federal charges for corporate income tax, shipping and distribution from the manufacturer, inventory taxes on the federal level for the manufacturer and any other federal costs that the manufacturer pays, plus the manufacturer's profit. Remove those and you have the true product cost which the Fair tax is claiming to do. They state (in a study) that those costs average around 22% of the product cost, not the selling price which includes all the retailer's costs and his profit. The Fair Tax is applied to the selling price not the product cost so those two figures come from different areas.

To make it short.....the cost reductions that the Fair Tax removes are the federal costs from the actual product cost not the overall one to the retailer and not the selling price. It does not address any state or distribution costs even though those are product costs paid by the retailer in his price from the manufacturer. Assume that those federal costs add up to say 15%. That is 15% of the cost at the manufacturer which could be say $75 leaving $15 for shipping, distribution and state costs. Now the Fair Tax is applied to the selling price of the product. We can assume (yeah) that the amount removed from the true product cost is $75 x 15% in this case or $11.25. Meaning that all else remaining the same, the cost to the retailer is $78.75. Add in his $10 profit and the selling price becomes $88.75. Lookin' good, eh? Now, lets add the Fair Tax.... $88.75 + 23% = $109.16 becomes the new selling price. Do like most retailers will and round up and the product on the dealer's shelf is now $110.

Of course this doesn't include any lift from not having to do income tax....for the feds, you still have to do state.

> Is this what you mean, or am I off base?

The point is that it is not a wash. You cannot remove some costs from a product, put many of them back in, add the federal revenue needed for income tax, FICA, etc and still come up with the same number.

IOw, you feel that if the wealthy had not been taxed at such a high rate, the post war boom would have never happened? It is all due to that high tax rate and no euphoria from winning a war, not any plants already built and ramped up and ready to go, nor a public looking for new cars, for example, since it hadn't had any since 1942, no more need for victory gardens, no rationing of nylons? ;)

So, you are assuming that the wholesaler's cost is the cost to which the 22% (average) compliance reduction should be applied, rather than the retailer's cost, yes?

Why wouldn't the cost reduction assumption be made earlier in the food chain, say with the guys who sell the raw materials to the place that screws together the widgets?

Yep. It has to be to remove compliance costs, corporate taxes, etc. on the product. It can't be based on selling price which includes a lot of other things that Fair Tax doesn't address. Fair Tax is applied to the retail selling price while the reductions are applied to the product cost at the manufacturer and include nothing added by the state or shipping and distribution or costs to the retailer. They are two different numbers. That is why gfn's example doesn't work.

> Why wouldn't the cost reduction assumption be made earlier in the food > chain, say with the guys who sell the raw materials to the place that

It is made there also. There are compliance costs (which seem to be defined as all costs to the product at the manufacturer other than state charges and would include corporate taxes) deducted from the various stages of the product from being born to being shipped to the retailer.

Yes. The mechanism used for a lot of the federal stuff has to remain in place, however, for those states who don't do that.

I don't think he is aware of or knows how to use TinyUrl. There is a Further, let's assume for a moment that there is a net "savings" for people under the new tax structure.....wouldn't that seem to be a justification for the government to simply raise the tax rate so as to maintain current spending levels with smaller deficits, thus negating anything that his plan might gain?

Hmmmmm...

So why aren't you sending more of your money in?

I mean according to your assertions you're not paying enough in taxes, so why don't you make a check out to the IRS for the extra that you think you deserve to pay?

Are you telling us you're a hypocrite who refuses to pay as much in taxes as he says he should?

Not worried about the redundancy, but simply suggesting to John when that many people independently tell him the same thing....he might want to buy a clue about how people view him.

So let's see. You're unhappy when a larger portion of the wealth class income is taxed than the working individual, and you're unhappy when it's a sales tax. So what sort of tax would you consider fair? Something that sticks it to the rich guy because he's rich and you're not?

- So let's see.
- You're unhappy when a larger portion of
- the wealth class income is taxed than the
- working individual,
- and you're unhappy when it's a sales tax.
- So what sort of tax would you consider fair?

Liberty Net: May 21, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/05/liberty-net-may-21-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

ROLLING THUNDERSTORM static that never seemed to stop inhibited early check-ins on this weekï¿½s Liberty Net, but the noise eventually subsided ï¿½ and the conversation and exchange of information accelerated ï¿½ as the evening progressed. When high noise conditions prevail, the extra few dB from an amplifier and a high, efficient antenna really make a difference.

Here are just a few of the topics discussed and debated this time on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ Obama has brazenly ignored the War Powers Act ï¿½ the very law he invoked to legitimize his invasion of Libya. And now that the 60-day deadline for getting Congressional approval has passed, that invasion is illegal by any standards. (13 minutes)

ï¿½ Dominique Strauss-Kahnï¿½s rape and sodomy charges may be the least of his worries: Apparently the Black African woman he allegedly raped lives in an apartment set aside exclusively for tenants who are infected with HIV. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ Mirroring what happened to Helen Thomas, more and more individual journalists are being forbidden to ask questions at administration press conferences, and some regime officials no longer allow questions from anyone. (51 minutes)

ï¿½ Why did the Columbus, Ohio police mace elderly Americans who were peacefully protesting J.P. Morgan Chaseï¿½s rape of Americaï¿½s financial system? (1 hour 12 minutes)

ï¿½ All over the world, cash-strapped governments have started to tax (that is, seize) private pension funds that were long promised to be tax free, in order to fund entitlement programs for the underclass and bailouts for the overclass. This means that all your funds could be gone by the time you retire. (1 hour 55 minutes)

ï¿½ Congress has already passed pretended laws ï¿½ which go into effect in 2012 ï¿½ requiring that all your transactions involving $600 or more be reported to the regime in Washington. Whatever happened to the concept of financial privacy? (2 hours 3 minutes)

ï¿½ China is now the number one buyer of gold in the world ï¿½ getting rid of its paper dollars faster than ever before; a fact which should send a powerful message to Americans. (2 hours 36 minutes)

ï¿½ The regime, by shamelessly raiding Social Security funds to buy missiles and buy votes from the largely-worthless underclass, is flagrantly violating its own laws. America has degenerated to the point at which laws are now _only_ enforced selectively ï¿½ that is, to benefit the regime in some way, or to silence its critics. (3 hours 6 minutes)

In addition to checking in and experiencing the Liberty Net over the air, you can log on Saturday evenings beginning at 10PM Eastern for live audio feeds of the Net (sometimes from several stations simultaneously) and live text chat too at http://stickam.com/thelibertynet via N2SAG.

All our thanks go to N2SAG and N2IRJ and especially W1WCR for their hard work which makes the Liberty Net and its Internet adjuncts possible. Remember, you can download the mp3 recordings of the net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your gym, or on your way to work, or anywhere you choose.

Yes-&-No -or- Maybe So...

The Idea to give Favorable Tax Treatment to Dividends Interest and Capital Gains : Is To Encourage Investment and Economic {Business} Development and Job Creation :
THAT'S A GOOD THING FOR THE INVESTOR; THE BUSINESS; THE EMPLOYED; AND THE GOVERNMENT
-aka- SOCIETY AS A WHOLE :o)

BUT For Society As A Whole {Everyone Equally}
How Do We As A Society Ensure Diverse Wealth
Creation For All Citizens {Members-of-Society}

Leveling The Wealth Creation Field : Take The Average Annual Salary of a Working Man/Women
-example- $50K

Now Give 'Favorable' Tax Treatment to the First $50K of Dividends, Interest and Capital Gains, Corporate {Partnership} Income Earned by Individuals Yearly -and- Tax the Rest as Ordinary Income Just Like The Working Man/Woman Pays
-that's-tax-equity-that's-fair-that's-just-Encourage Savings By All Encourage Thrift By All
Encourage Investment By All
Encourage Wealth Creation By All

Ensure Wealth Creation For All : Enrich All

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Mr. Smith appears to be the sort who cannot admit a mistake. While this appears to be a common trait on UseNet, he took it to an interesting level: when it was pointed out that his variable sales tax proposal (7% for the common smuck, 47% for rich folks) was unworkable outside of a totalitarian state, he questioned the intelligence of those that questioned his assertions, and wondered why they didn't know he was talking about a flat tax. What?

In other words, unless you look good in blue, don't hold your breath waiting for Mr. Smith to become clued in.

So let me check you on this. The first 2 everyone pays, but somehow you think the high income earners somehow don't pay "Their Fair (Equal) Share of the Cost of American Society"

Why is that exactly?

What is far about taxing high income people above and beyond what is charged to everyone else?

Is there some special service that High Income Earners receives that justifies and extra tax just for them?

What is that extra service provided to them, and only them, by the government?

I want to get that new fangled stem cell treatment to make my boobs grow real BIG.I am not a homo though.

When I was at the Goodwill store this morning I told Pam to find me some sexy looking wimmins clothes for me to wear in my house.She said if she finds any, do I want her to sling them on my porch.I told her that would be OK.

Probably Q'uran q&a . Not on the same frequency today . Could that have been BSKSA ? Don't know .The 40meter band is waking up slowly .
Several anemic signals are heard at the moment (0430UTC) . . .

Suddenly came alive at 0655 UTC . No more religious programs so far .
Signal is fading in and out wildly . Heard some music as well !

Well, recently it was found that Libya having 5 times the oil reserves previously thought helps spark the interest of the shadow government.

The fact that Libya is solvent and not under tons of debt is one more incentive.

The fact that Libya has considerable gold reserves it but another incentive.

The fact that Libya provide free medical care/drugs and education up to the PhD levels is another incentive, the shadow government does not like its' slaves expecting the same ...

Etc., etc., etc.

Yes, Khadaffi is aligned with other parts of Africa, and he had supported the Palestinian cause, his country does have a social net, and if the neo-liberals of US and the Nato get control of Lybia, the social net may be erased. Als Khadaffi did not do the Lockerbie jet liner bombing. That was done by the CIA and European intelligence agencies. Just like with Malosovic, the corrupt international court at the Hague couldn't convict him, so NATO and the US just poisoned him to death in prison. Welsey Clark told Amy Goodman on Democracy Now! in 2003, that the US was going to attack these countries, Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, Lybia, Somalia, and two others I can't remember off the top of my head. Since then they have all been attacked, with some sort of invented pretexts like using B-52 for humanitarian purposes.

* Figuring Just Who Should Pay For All of This
-hint- Everyone !
* Truly Fair & Equitable Tax Plan for All
* 90% Pay as they Live Naturally [No Tax Paperwork]
* Flat Corporate Profits Tax that Ensures Corporations Pay Their Fair {Equal} Share of the Cost of American Society
* Flat Income Tax for the Top 10% Rich/Wealthy that Ensures High Income Earners Pay Their Fair {Equal} Share of the Cost of American Society
* That's a Flat-Tax+Plus2© a Truly Fair and Equitable Tax Plan for a Healthy and Strong America With Fairness and Tax Equality For All.
"Building a Better America for the 21st Century"
- So let me check you on this.
- The first 2 everyone pays, but somehow you think
- the high income earners somehow don't pay
- "Their Fair (Equal) Share of the Cost of American Society"

They Don't Now -and- Under a simple 'Fair-Tax' [Flat-Sales-Tax] System They Don't Either [.]
- Why is that exactly?

It Is What it Is [.]
* The average Working Man {Family} Pays-to-Live : Spends ~90% of their Income/Earnings on Daily Living Expenses; and has little 'Disposable-Income'
-they-can-not-afford-to-pay-any-more-taxes-
* The High Income Earner {Family} Pays-to-Live : Spends

~80% of their Income/Earnings on Daily Living Expenses;
and has more 'Disposable-Income'
-they-could-afford-to-pay-some-more-taxes-
* The Rich-Wealth {Family} Pays-to-Live : Spends ~40% of their Income/Earnings on Daily Living Expenses; and has Greatly Excessive 'Disposable-Income' =They=Can=Afford=To=Pay=More=Taxes=&=Should=
- What is fair about taxing high income people above
- and beyond what is charged to everyone else?

Simply Paying Back To {Into} The Society : That Which You Have Received Greatly From It -reciprocity-
- Is there some special service that High Income
- Earners receives

The Society Allows/Affords Them Their Wealth

- that justifies and extra tax just for them?

It's Not an Extra Tax It Is Just The Continuation of The Flat-Tax in a Different Form : XX% =s XX%
-be-it-sales-income-or-corporate-
- What is that extra service provided to them,
- and only them,

Their Riches/Wealth Property 'Status' [.]
-disposable-income- -disposable-income-
To Them Far Greater Than Others In The Society.
- by the government?

No By The "Society" ! : NOT the 'government' :
The 'government' is simply the Agent of the "Society".

Riches and Wealth Way Beyond the average Measure of the Vast Majority of Members of the Society :
{The Extra Benefits of Living in this Society.}
From Those Who Have Benefited Greatly {More} :
Much Is Expected [Taxed] That's The Standard Rational For A Graduated Income Tax System.
Actually All Pay A Sales Tax As They Live Their Lives.
-there-are-taxed-equally-based-on-their-spending-
But beyond the basic needs and costs of daily living;
providing for yourself; providing for your family; this spending has a rational limit based on your income.
-spending-with-in-your-means-

1st - For the Lower 85% of the People :
The average Working Man {Family} might make $50K~$100K a year and pay $10K~$20K in a Flat-Sales-Tax System as they Spend-to-Live* and have around $5K~$10K of what is called "Disposable Income" {Wild Money}
Note : That a Flat-Sales-Tax System functions on your Natural Everyday Spending; and the fact that you are Taxed Daily as you go about Living : Spend-to-Live Taxing
2nd - For the Upper 10% of the People :
The High Income Earner {Family} might make $150K~$300K
a year and pay $25K~$50K in a Flat-Sales-Tax System as they Spend-to-Live* and have around $30K~$60K of what is called "Disposable Income" {Wild Money}
3rd - For the Top 5% of the People :
The Rich-Wealth {Family} might make $500K~$1M and more... a year and pay $70~$140K in a Flat-Sales-Tax System as they Spend-to-Live* and have around $150K~$300K of what is called "Disposable Income" {Wild Money}
SO Here is where the Flat Income Tax comes in :
All Income beyond $250K is Taxed at the =SAME= Sales Tax Rate XX% [20%] that Everyone Pays
-ex- $500K Income - $250K = $250K x 20% = $50K Flat Income Tax -result- "Disposable Income" is reduced from $150K to $100K -note-that's-more-money-to-spend-than-the-average-man-{family}-earns-yearly-
-ex- $1M Income - $250K = $750K x 20% = $150K Flat Income Tax -result- "Disposable Income" is reduced
from $300K to $150K -note-that's-more-money-to-spend-
than-the-average-man-{family}-earns-yearly-
-ex- $10M Income - $250K = $9.75M x 20% = $1.95M Flat
Income Tax -result- "Disposable Income" is reduced from $3.M to $1M -note-that's-way- more-money-to--spend-than-the-average-man-{family}-earns-yearly-
The Object of the Flat Income Tax of Grossly Excessive Earnings of the Rich and Wealth is to Reduce Their Disposable Income and Not Cut-In-To or Reduce the Ability to Live Comfortably on the Vast Majority of Their Income/Earnings/Wealth.
The Flat-Tax+Plus2© Tax Equality System :

Probably just that embarrassing condition known as "man boobs."

In cuhulins' case, I don't think they were caused by marijuana use, but then, who knows -- maybe he likes to smoking while sitting around in "something sexy and comfortable!"

I think you might have it there. We are using b-52s and bombs to counter Qaddafis' use of humanitarian free medical care and free educations!

He should have armed his countries people before splitting, our military (far too much involvement by private companies!) would finally be seen as the mass murders they are.

John I've asked you before, but you don't answer. How did two Hawaiian newspapers get the Obama birth announcement?

Why didn't John McCain's staff find any discrepancies? Why did a Republican governor of Hawaii affirm the US birth? Why did Congress pass a resolution proclaiming Hawaii as Obama's birthplace?

Huh?

Brain dead mccain couldn't find the prize in a cracker jack box, why no one voted for him ...

First, Ann and obama senior were never married, and never lived together in Hawaii. (There is no marriage certificate for obama sr and Ann.)

Second, the address associated with the announcement is the grandparents.

The horse was stillborn, dead on arrival, now it so stinking rotten, it's falling apart, and even the scavengers won't touch it, only insects and the insect brained will even go near it.

BWHAHAHAHA! You birthtards are so pitiful, it's funny, but kind of sad (For the people living with or near you), in a way.

But mostly, you're just funny, without intending to be. And that's the best kind of funny.

The major differences I have found, you can have about a dozen cheaply built computers for the same cost as one big expensive computer.

But then, I have a closet in the basement full of motherboards, towers, desktops, video cards, LCD monitors, etc.

All picked up very cheaply at flea markets, yard sales, etc.

Just don't follow the advice of a salesman!

Re: Brain dead mccain couldn't find the prize in a cracker jack box, why no one voted for him .

McCain didn't do the investigation. It was conducted by members of his staff.

Re: First, Ann and obama senior were never married, and never lived together in Hawaii

Even if true, how does that disprove Hawaii as Obama's place of birth?

Re: Second, the address associated with the announcement is the grandparents.

Once again, the same question. Even if true, how does that disprove the place of birth?

You are the one claiming that an announcement in a newspaper is some type of legal and binding document which would risk prosecution, fine or punishment if "doctored."

I am the one pointing out that an announcement in a newspaper means nothing ...

I am not into name brand computers. I like generic cases -- towers, but have desktops.

Prefer NVIDIA video cards, SATA hard drives, 550W+ power supplies, etc.

DELL, HP, COMPAQ, etc. are all junk, ACER is OK, in laptops.

I am still waiting for a generic laptop case and components where you can finally build a custom laptop!

Um, Abercrombie saud back not to long ago that they couldn't find the original. Then auddenly SHAZAAM!! Obama has a fresh copy of a document (not stamped of emossed BTW) that the governor could not find.

Yeah, I find that suspicious. But then I have functioning brain cells and don't depend on lies and deception as a viable political strategy.

That doesn't explain anything. How about addressing the question:

Why should the wealthy pay more than their fair share?

Home built computers are better because they are not preloaded with a bunch of useless sheet, you can have exactly what you want.
Check out,

if you want ideas how to build something Custom.
I want a hollow plastic doll that looks like Jayne Mansfield or Marilynn Monroe, stuff it with computer parts for a computer.

BSKSA is not shown on the A11 sked for this freq at all. Unless it is either VOIRI at an unscheduled time or the Voice of Tajik with a suddenly spectacular new & improved signal, I'm going with Mauritania.

I find facts where they lay even kooksites have a fair amount of truth in them.

Your problem is your in time-out and are not allowed collect anyevidence that sheds light on your governments conspiracy to start wars in other countrys and allow them to bring in THe New World Order even if they commit genocide on their own citizens.

The trouble in Somalia,Lybia,Pakastan,Iraq,Afganistan,ect...were all CIA plots to bring about One World Government.It's Sunworship at its finest.Did you know that Italy is now rebuilding the Parthenon to resurrect the goddess Athena?

BWHAHAHAHAHAHAHA! Is that supposed to make sense? So when will you post any evidence to back up your claims? Kooksites and insane ravings aren't proof.

I doubt that's why they are doing it, if they are rebuilding it. I'm sure you read it on a kooksite someplace, right?

This is all against the Constitution.

The crooked public servants who are serving a shadow government, the only problem is, they are breaking the law.

It makes no difference who wrote the laws we are willing to live by, the problem is the crooks breaking the laws -- that has always been a problem.

Consider the opportunities this woman has to expose him to aids!

Spit in his food, place blood and/or body fluids in/on sensitive items,

The problem is the system and the US Constitution itself, not just how it is interpreted. The US Constitution was written by slave owners and is an exploiter's vision of how to run things. We have much better ideas since 1776, we have the Communist Manifesto.

I find no problem with the Constitution, we are given all our rights and only relinquish a few to have an orderly society and be good neighbors to each other.

The problem is if laws are "added" to the Constitution, or laws are ignored by our criminal public servants ... this is no fault of the

Constitution, it is the fault of not taking the criminals to task, DUH!

Nope. Didn't see anything there about the FY2011 budget or President JugEars mendicare plan. Would you care to try again?

Why didn't Congress pass an FY2011 BUDGET ya moron.

Where is JugEars plan to save Medicare?

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

COMMUNISM AND JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRACY
Copyright © 2008 Bob Avakian

for Saying What You’re Saying”
To begin—and to immediately touch on the basic reality of how this country is ruled and what its democracy actually amounts to—I want to recount a story I have told several times, because, in a simple and straightforward way, it concentrates so much of importance. Back in 1979, I went on a speaking tour in many of the major cities in the U.S., and in connection with that I made a number of media appearances. At one point I did a taped TV program, on which I was interviewed by several Black journalists in Cleveland. Right after the taping of this program, during which I had laid out clearly my revolutionary viewpoint, the woman who was moderating the program turned to me and said, very matter-of-factly: “My, you’re awfully brave.” Well, this sort of took me aback, so I asked her: “Why do you say that?” And she replied, in the same matter-of-fact tone: “You know, they kill people for saying what you’re saying.”
As I have pointed out a number of times in telling this story, what is very significant about this exchange, and her comments in particular, is that she didn’t even say: “You know, they kill people for trying to do what you’re talking about.” She said simply: they kill people for saying what you’re saying. In this, she was cutting right to the quick, and in fact getting right to the essence of “American democracy.”

And this was not just an odd comment from this particular Black journalist. It is not at all uncommon to hear comments of this kind from Black people and others who have had experience with the brutality and murder commonly carried out by the police, especially in the inner cities across America—or people who, in any case, have some sense of the actual history of this country and in particular the way it has dealt with those who are regarded, by the powers-that-be, as a significant threat, of one kind or another, to their rule. Among many such people there is, if not a profound scientific understanding, nevertheless a basic sense of the real nature of how things are run in this country—of the real relationship between the people who actually rule this society (however people think of that) and the people over whom they rule in running the society (however people understand that).

This is the reason I feel it is important to recount this story frequently—not only because that journalist’s comment hit me very sharply at the time and struck me as very incisive, but because it does capture in a very concentrated way some essential things which far too many people, including many formally educated people, are actually ignorant of—or choose to ignore.

Another anecdote from “everyday life” also brings out this same basic point rather sharply, and unexpectedly. Recently, there was a story on ESPN/The Magazine online, by Scoop Jackson, a Black writer whose material has also appeared in publications such as Slam magazine. This article for ESPN/The Magazine was about Etan Thomas, a professional basketball player on the Washington Wizards (they can’t be called the Washington Bullets anymore—can’t have bullets in Washington other than those directed by the government). [Laughter] Etan Thomas is what they call a “role player” for the Wizards—he comes off the bench, scores a few points a game—he has talent but he’s not a prominent player. And he is someone who, unfortunately, is kind of a rarity these days in professional sports in the U.S.: a progressive guy who is outspoken with his views. He has spoken at some of the anti-war rallies; he’s written poetry condemning the Bush administration and politicians in general and speaking to the glaring contradiction between the way that they talk about things in society and the way things actually are. He has spoken about wanting to drag these politicians down to the inner cities and force them to see what really goes on there, what people there are put through. So, this article by Scoop Jackson is mainly about Etan Thomas’s politics, but in the middle of this article Jackson comments that if Thomas averaged 30 points a game, he might be dead.

Now, to be clear, Jackson doesn’t mean that it’s dangerous to score 30 points a game, in the sense that the effort, the exertion involved in this, might kill him. No, the clear implication is that if Etan Thomas were a prominent player on the level of a Michael Jordan, capturing that kind of media attention and the imagination of masses of people—and if, from that position, he were saying the things he’s saying—he would probably be assassinated by the powers--that-be. Thomas is not calling for revolution, but he is indicting certain outrages of the system—and if he were doing that as a really prominent player, they might very well kill him, because it's too dangerous to have someone with that level of prominence saying even the kinds of things that Thomas is saying.

These "slices of life" do capture something very essential, and provide a kind of backdrop for a fuller discussion of the much-vaunted "American freedom and democracy," of the system that rules and shapes this society, and of the need for a radically different society and world.

"Jeffersonian Democracy":
Ideals, Illusions, and Reality

As the title suggests, much of this discussion will unfold in relation to the ideas of Thomas Jefferson and the ideal of "Jeffersonian democracy," and the contrast between that and the viewpoint and program of communism—which represents, in reality, a far more liberating vision of human freedom.

Jefferson, and his political philosophy, stand in a real sense as an emblem of what is in fact bourgeois democracy—and in reality bourgeois dictatorship—in the history of the United States of America. And, as Isaac Kramnick and R. Laurence Moore point out, while "America's historical memory" of Jefferson "has been rooted in distinct features of his protean career," for many people Jefferson "remains the spokesman of a radical and popular democracy never achieved in America."1 In other words, many people—and many progressive people, in particular—who acknowledge that historically there have been, and today there still remain, what they regard as serious "flaws" in the way democracy is actually practiced in the U.S., nevertheless cling to the notion that somehow if this system could actually be made to live up to its ideals, then it would indeed be the best of all possible systems, not only in conception but in reality. And many of these people cling to Jefferson as the personification of, as Kramnick and Moore put it, "a radical and popular democracy" which has "never [been] achieved in America," but which they long to see fulfilled.

To put this in other—more blunt, and scientific—terms, Jefferson stands as a personification and a concentration of many of the illusions of people in the middle strata in particular, and more specifically many in the intelligentsia, who have not ruptured with, and in fact stubbornly cleave to, a bourgeois-democratic view of the world. And not only is this the case broadly in society, but it has even been true, believe it or not, in the history of the communist movement in this country. We have the phenomenon—which is both astounding and disgraceful, if you're coming at things from a genuinely communist perspective—of the old Communist Party, USA upholding Jefferson as a model. Even at the height of 1960s radicalism, if you went around the country looking for the CP, where could you find them? In their Jefferson Bookstores! This is a glaring example of how people who claim to be opposed to capitalism and the imperialism of the U.S.—and even some who claim to be communists—have wrapped themselves in the mantle of bourgeois democracy, particularly as that is personified by Thomas Jefferson. Back in the day, it used to be quite a lot of fun to get into a discussion with CP people about why they had Jefferson Bookstores. Besides the obvious fact that Jefferson was a slaveholder, there was the more general fact that Jefferson is a representative of the system that the CP claimed, at least, to be working to get rid of. And that's just the point: You cannot get rid of this system if you proceed on the basis of upholding and extolling one of the main representatives of that very system, someone who is indeed emblematic of what that system is all about. And, in reality, you cannot get rid of the egregious outrages that many do recognize are committed by the government of the United States, unless you get rid of the whole system of which these egregious outrages are a concentrated expression and of which this government—and in particular its executive power and armed forces—are an instrument and enforcer. You cannot change all this while at the same time clinging to the ideas and ideals that characterize this system and dominate this society—ideas and ideals of which Thomas Jefferson is, in fact, a fitting representative.

Jefferson's ideal of a good and just society—and the reality of slavery

Let's get into this further by examining Jefferson's notion of an agrarian model as the concentration of the good, just and virtuous society.2 This vision of Jefferson's involved a number of rather sharp ironies, which it is worth exploring.

The first irony: Jefferson extolled the yeoman, that is, the small independent landowning farmer, as the emblem—and the existence of many such farmers as the basis—for the best form of government and of a virtuous society. To cite Kramnick and Moore once again: "For Jefferson the moral possibilities of democracy depended on keeping America an agricultural nation. That is, he did not think that democracy and the morality necessary to sustain democracy could flourish under social conditions that destroyed the economic independence of individuals." (The Godless Constitution, p. 152) Yet Jefferson consistently acted in the interests of the aristocratic large landowning and slaveholding class in the southern United States, in opposition to the interests of small farmers—and, of course, this was also in opposition to the interests of that group of individuals who most glaringly did not have independence economically, or in any other way: the slaves, who did not actually count as individuals in the eyes of the slaveholders.

In reality, Jefferson's agrarian society turned out to be a society based on slavery and ruled by slaveowners.

One striking example that a number of people have pointed to in this regard is the Louisiana Purchase (the purchase by the United States government of the Louisiana Territory from the French in 1803). Having suffered significant military setbacks—and dramatically so in the attempt to put down the armed rebellion of slaves in Haiti which had been initiated under the leadership of Toussaint L'Ouverture—Napoleon Bonaparte, ruler of France, reckoned that he couldn't easily hold on to this territory in the Americas, and so Jefferson, then President of the United States, stepped in to quickly grab up this territory. In this he acted primarily in the interests of the slaveowners and in order to spread the slaveowning system into the new territories acquired through this act—not to develop an agrarian society based on a multitude of small farmers. This is just one example of many that could be cited which clearly illustrate that Jefferson consistently acted in the interests of the slaveowning class—in conflict with the interests not only of the slaves but also of the yeoman in the South, as well as the rising capitalist class centered in the North.

The whole southern way of life depended on slavery—that was its fundamental economic basis. Even small landowners who didn't own slaves strove to get into a position to own some. And, with regard to Jefferson himself, not only his economic status but also his political fortunes, including his election to the presidency, depended on slavery, and in particular the "three-fifths" provision in the Constitution of the United States—the so-called "three-fifths compromise," which established that, for the purposes of taxation but also of voting and representation in the government, each slave would be counted as three-fifths of a human being. As many northerners pointed out at the time, coming from various positions and with various motives, this "compromise" essentially allowed the southern states, where slaves were counted as property, to accumulate greater representation in the national government, because of the multiplication of this "human property." In other words, northerners who owned property—for example, farms or factories—did not get to count each factory or farm as part of a formula for determining how much representation a northern state would have in the national government (in the House of Representatives, in particular), but the slave states got to count three-fifths of all the slaves, at any given time, in terms of this representation. This tilted things toward the southern states, in terms of the national political structure, from the beginning of the country. In fact, this was something that the southern states insisted upon as a condition of their joining with the northern states to form the United States of America, as a country with a single national government. Even those in the North who, on the basis of moral conviction and/or economic interest, were opposed to slavery, ended up capitulating to this demand, because forming this new country was more important to them—was understood by them to be more essential to their interests—than abolishing slavery. Thus, while this "three-fifths" provision in the Constitution was a compromise, this compromise gave a certain disproportionate power to the South, to the class of southern slaveowners; and this enabled them, up until the Civil War nearly 100 years later, to block and counter steps that would have gone in the direction of abolishing slavery.

It is sometimes claimed that Jefferson was actually opposed to slavery and wanted to see an end to it. And you can find statements by Jefferson where he says that slavery is in fact a blight and that it will have negative consequences for some time to come. There have also been misinterpretations of what Jefferson wrote about slavery. To take one important example, there are passages he wrote in drafts of the Declaration of Independence—some of which did not, but some of which did, make it into the final version of that Declaration—where the King of England and the British government were strongly condemned for supposedly imposing the slave trade on the United States. Now, there were, in fact, ways in which Jefferson and the slave-owning class in Virginia generally were opposed to aspects of the international slave trade, even while they themselves were involved in selling slaves to other states and to slaveowners in other territories. In this, the essential motivation of these Virginia slaveowners was that they didn't want the price of a slave being driven down, since they themselves had become major sellers of slaves within America itself. This is, fundamentally, the reason that they were opposed to the continuation—once they did oppose it—of the international slave trade. They viewed this above all in terms of property, and supply and demand in relation to selling this particular kind of property—human beings. So, here again, Jefferson acted in the interests of the slave-owning class, and his "agrarian society" turned out to be a slaveowning plantation system—not a society of small independent yeomen.

This is of course related to, and in an overall sense part of, the larger contradiction between Jefferson's lofty sounding statements in the Declaration of Independence about the equality of all men (note: all men) and their "inalienable rights" and, on the other hand, the glaring fact that Jefferson not only owned slaves himself but consistently acted on behalf of the class of slaveowners and the institution of slavery, even while voicing certain moral qualms about slavery and musings about its long-term consequences for the new American republic.

Slavery, White Supremacy, and Democracy in America

Historian Edmund S. Morgan in American Slavery, American Freedom, which is cited in David Brion Davis's book Inhuman Bondage, argues that for Jefferson and other Virginia slaveowners, such as George Washington ("father of our country") and James Madison (who was the principal author of the U.S. Constitution and who himself became president of the United States), there was a certain kind of unity—a unity of opposites, as we communists would say—between how they viewed whites, and on the other hand, Black Africans, mulattoes, and Indians. Here I am going to quote from Morgan and provide some commentary on what he says, to highlight the essential points.

Morgan points out: "Racism thus absorbed in Virginia the fear and contempt that men in England, whether Whig or Tory, monarchist or republican, felt for the inarticulate lower classes" of their own "race." What Morgan is getting at is that in Europe, on the part of the "liberals" as well as the "conservatives" (the Whigs and the Tories), there was an open contempt, especially among the upper, ruling classes and their political representatives, for the "ignorant rabble" of the lower classes, while in the United States this did not find exactly the same expression because a lot of this contempt was, to so speak, deflected and directed toward the masses of Black people—who were overwhelmingly enslaved, especially in the South—and toward mulattoes and Indians.

Morgan continues—and this is very significant in terms of the whole development of bourgeois democracy in the U.S.: “Racism made it possible for white Virginians to develop a devotion to equality”—equality for whites, we should underline—“that English republicans had declared to be the soul of liberty.” And Morgan points out that one of the things that made this possible was the fact that, in Virginia, “There were too few free poor on hand to matter.” In other words, because of racism and viewing Africans, mulattoes, and Indians as lesser beings not really deserving of freedom, white Virginians could, without feeling an acute contradiction, articulate, as Jefferson did in the Declaration of Independence, lofty principles about the equality and inalienable rights of all people. They were speaking about white people—and more specifically white men—while explicitly excluding these other groups of people—most especially the people of African origin whom they enslaved. The one went together with the other: the inclusion of some and the exclusion of others, the notion of equality among white people (though this too was not a reality) and the subjugation and enslavement of Black people, mulattoes, and Indians. Here is the paradox and the irony, here is a profound contradiction, built into the United States of America from its very beginning: These Virginians, whose ideas have exerted a very great influence on the conception of freedom in this country—and the embodiment of this in founding documents of this country—represented the interests of the slaveowning class among whites, yet they could declare that they were speaking in universal terms about freedom for all people. They could proclaim a republic, in opposition to a monarchy, they could extol the principles of a government consisting of representatives chosen by the people, and the freedoms associated with republicanism—and they could believe in this—even while practicing and defending slavery, as well as other forms of exploitation and oppression.

As Morgan puts it: “by lumping Indians, mulattoes and Negroes in a single pariah class”—that is, by putting them in a category of beings who are not really to be considered human and not to be afforded the rights and freedoms that human beings should have—“Virginians had paved the way for a similar lumping of small and large planters in a single master class.” Here again we see the dialectical (contradictory) unity between the exclusion of one part of society, and the notion of the unity of the others—identified as white people—even with the class divisions among them.

Morgan points to a very profound conclusion: “Racism became an essential, if unacknowledged, ingredient of the republican ideology that enabled Virginians”—like Washington and Madison, as well as Jefferson—“to lead the nation.”3

This speaks to a very significant particularity, or peculiarity, of bourgeois society and the principles of bourgeois democracy as they developed from the very beginning of, and have evolved historically in, the United States. As David Brion Davis points out, Morgan argues that racial slavery enabled Virginia's slaveowning planter class to coopt the poorer whites and thus perpetuate a highly exploitative and unequal society under the banner of republican liberty. As Davis puts it: "Virginia's slavery and racism became, paradoxically, the social and ideological basis for America's dedication to freedom and equality." (Inhuman Bondage, p. 135)

This is very important to understand, not only in terms of the founding of this country, but in terms of its implications and its consequences throughout the history of the country, down to today. The republican ideology and notions of freedom that have characterized the way in which the United States has been conceived and ruled have indeed included, as fundamental elements, racism and the oppression of Black people, and other "people of color": the exclusion of these groups—overtly and explicitly, or at least in reality and in practice—from the prevailing notion and application of freedom, and their subjugation from the very beginning and in the essential functioning of the country. And there has been a definite tendency for this to contribute in various ways to blunting the overall class conflicts in American society and the class consciousness of the proletarians—among the whites in particular, but also in a different way among Black people and other oppressed nationalities.

All this relates to the first irony I mentioned: Jefferson talked about a yeoman-based agrarian society as the model society, but actually, in opposition to that, he consistently upheld and fought for the interests of the slaveowning class; and the agrarian society that in reality he was an embodiment of, and a spokesman for, was a slave-owning plantation system.

Bourgeois Democracy, Bourgeois Elitism

The second irony is that, while Jefferson extolled the yeoman and the notion of a yeoman-based society, he firmly believed that such yeomen had to be led and headed by members of more elite strata, intellectually and economically—of which Jefferson himself was a representative. And here is an irony within this irony, so to speak: With regard to "Jeffersonian democrats"—this applies to bourgeois-democrats more generally, but in particular to those who uphold and extol Jefferson and his ideas and ideals as the model of a great society, even if it has yet to be fully achieved—many of them are among those who are very quick to attack communists, and in particular Lenin and his work What Is To Be Done?, for alleged elitism! How often have we heard them say things like: "Communists like Lenin think that the masses are too stupid to know what's good for them! They think these masses have to have elite intellectuals ordering them about and telling them what's good for them, since they're too stupid to know what they really want and need—that's what the communist view is, that's what Lenin was arguing in What Is To Be Done?"

Here, I don't have time to go into all the ways in which that is a gross distortion of what Lenin was actually arguing in What Is To Be Done?. But the fact is that the essence of what he's arguing there is the opposite of these accusations: He is insisting on both the ability and the necessity for the masses to understand the basic dynamics of objective reality, and of human society in particular, in order to consciously struggle to transform society, to make revolution with the final aim of bringing a communist world into being. He is emphasizing that this is the only way that such a radical transformation of society can actually come about. And, yes, he is insisting that the masses need a vanguard to lead them in this struggle—a vanguard whose purpose is precisely to enable the masses themselves to make revolution, and not to substitute for them (or attempt to substitute for them) in doing that.

So here's "the irony within the irony": Many of these Jeffersonian (bourgeois) democrats never tire of hurling the charge of "elitism" against communism, and against Lenin in particular, and yet their hero and model Thomas Jefferson was himself a firm believer in the idea that the common people needed an economic and intellectual elite to guide them to the virtuous society. This is the logic Jefferson would have followed, if he had actually tried to bring such a society into being—which he did not.

Commodities, Polarization, Inequality, and Exploitation

And the third irony: If Jefferson's yeoman-based society had in fact been realized—and there are many reasons why it could not have been, but if it had been realized—before very long it would have given rise to and been supplanted by polarization and the emergence of elites ruling over the "common people." If you envision a society consisting of a large number of farmers, each holding a small amount of land and farming independently on that land, well first of all, there are many "natural conditions," if you will, that will differ among these landholdings—different conditions of the soil, the topography, and other environmental and geological factors—which will favor some over others.

Take Virginia itself, for example. I pointed to this in the "Revolution" talk:4 Why is there a West Virginia? The basic reason is that the territory of this state—which, before the Civil War, was the western part of Virginia—has a very different terrain than most of the rest of Virginia: this western area is very hilly and rocky, it has a lot of coal, but it is not so favorable for small farming or for farming in general (there is some small farming, but it's not nearly as favorable for farming as some of the other parts of Virginia, and other parts of the South, which have a much richer soil). That is the underlying reason why, at the time of the Civil War, this western part of the state broke away from Virginia and the Confederacy: the economic conditions and interests of people there were, in significant ways, different.

There is also the very important question of how different parcels of land are situated in relation to water, and other factors which confer an advantage (or disadvantage) to those owning the land. These differences, and their effects and consequences in terms of farm output and related factors, would assert themselves, even if you started out with everybody having approximately the same size farm, with many small farmers independently carrying out family farming—with all the patriarchy and male supremacy that goes along with that, let us not forget. You would have had inequalities within these families and family farms, and there would have been the developing polarization and inequalities between the different farmers, even if you just took a region of the country like the South, to say nothing of the fact that you had farmlands opening further to the West, you had farms of a different kind in the northeast of the country at its beginning, plus you had agriculture in other countries and world trade, which would have penetrated into all this and would have reacted upon and influenced the polarization already developing within agrarian-based society in the U.S. And let's imagine that somehow the government said: "OK, we will implement the 'Jeffersonian model': everybody has to be a small farmer—or, if everybody doesn't have to be a small farmer, at least the base of the whole economy and the whole society has to be small farmers—and if anybody starts getting much bigger than anybody else, in terms of landholdings, we'll take part of their land away and give it to others, so there will once again be more equal distribution of small farmland throughout the country." Well, eventually you would have had wars, armed conflicts, over that, because those whom you were hindering in that way (those whose land you were taking away in order to "equalize" things) would have resisted, and if you kept doing this they would have rebelled and taken to arms.

And then, again, there is the whole world market and its influence on all this. At the time of the founding of the U.S., if you look at the sale of the southern cotton and tobacco and other products, such as sugar, where were they going? To a large degree, it was to the world market, to Europe and other places. In order to maintain a situation of more or less equal landholdings, you would have had to stop everybody from producing for the world market, because if they produced for the world market, inequality would have been fostered and reinforced: Some farmers would have done better than others, would have found a more favorable market at any given time for whatever product these farmers were growing. And that would have reacted upon and intensified the polarization that was already developing. It would have been necessary to step in with the government and militarily shut off the country from the world market.

In short, this would have been totally impractical and unrealizable. Even if you started out on that basis—of many farmers with more or less equal size landholdings—you couldn't maintain it. This is fundamentally because all this would be—and in the actual history of the U.S. everything has been—within the overall context of commodity production and exchange. And there are two things to single out about that here: One, as what I have already sketched out illustrates, commodity production and exchange inevitably lead to inequalities, to polarization. The general operation of the commodity system means that there will be inequality; it means that some fare better in competition than others; it means that polarization develops. And what goes along with that—the second thing to emphasize here—is that labor power itself (the ability to work, in general) will become a commodity. You see this happening even today: Many farmers are no longer able to make it as farmers (or by farming alone); they are compelled to hire themselves out to others who are doing better (to other farmers, or to people running other businesses). In an agrarian society—and in particular one that is operating within an overall framework of capitalist commodity production and exchange—more and more people will be reduced to the position of being wage workers, having to sell their ability to work, their labor power, in order to live. You will also get that polarization—of capitalist and wage worker—along with the great unevenness that will continue to develop even among the class of landowners, broadly speaking. And when you add in the world market, once again, all this becomes much further accentuated.

So, along with the glaring contradiction between Jefferson's proclamations about how "all men are created equal" and endowed with certain "inalienable rights," on the one hand, and, on the other hand, not only the fact of his being a slaveowner but his repeated actions, including as president, on behalf of the whole slaveowning class, these other ironies (or contradictions—ironies are contradictions) that I have pinpointed and spoken to here are in turn an expression of the fundamental nature of the society in which Jefferson lived and functioned and of which he does stand as a legitimate champion: a system rooted in relations of exploitation and oppression.5

In sum on this point: In looking at what Jefferson wrote (in his "Notes on Virginia" and elsewhere) about the model of a good and virtuous society being one based on a multitude of yeoman farmers, and the conflict between this and the kind of society he actually upheld and fought for, we can extract from this some profound lessons about the nature of modern republican government as a bourgeois democracy—and about the nature of bourgeois democracy itself in general, as a form of class rule and domination, a dictatorship of the bourgeois class—as well as, more particularly, the specific expressions this has taken in the history of the United States, with the peculiar institution of slavery for more than a hundred years leading into the founding of this country, and for nearly a hundred more years after its founding.

The "Grand Narrative" About This Country—and the Brutal Reality Underneath This

There is a semi-official narrative about the history and the "greatness" of America, which says that this greatness of America lies in the freedom and ingenuity of its people, and above all in a system that gives encouragement and reward to these qualities. Now, in opposition to this semi-official narrative about the greatness of America, the reality is that—to return to one fundamental aspect of all this—slavery has been an indispensable part of the foundation for the "freedom and prosperity" of the USA. The combination of freedom and prosperity is, as we know, still today, and in some ways today more than ever, proclaimed as the unique quality and the special destiny and mission of the United States and its role in the world. And this stands in stark contradiction to the fact that without slavery, none of this—not even the bourgeois-democratic freedoms, let alone the prosperity—would have been possible, not only in the southern United States but in the North as well, in the country as a whole and in its development and emergence as a world economic and military power.

Obviously, the way in which agriculture in the South developed was directly related to, indeed founded on, the system of slavery. But, beyond that, the way in which the U.S. related to the world market, and built up its prosperity and economic base in that way, was to a very large degree dependent on slave-based production. The interchange between the development of manufacture in the North and the development of agriculture in the South, for example—even when, before the Civil War, that interchange went to a large degree through the world market and through England in particular, where for example cotton would be sold to the textile mills in England and other products would be sold from England to the northern manufacturers in the U.S.—even that would not have happened in the way it did, on the kind of scale it did and with the prosperity that it led to, without slavery. Of course, this process—where, for example, cotton from the southern U.S. was to a large degree sold to England, rather than to New England—contributed over time to sharpening the contradiction between the slave system in the South and the developing capitalist system in the North of the U.S. But the point to emphasize here is that, in an overall and fundamental sense, the slave-grown products of the southern U.S. constituted a major factor in the development of the U.S. economy, in the North as well as the South. And the development of that economy, in turn, has been the essential underlying basis for the massive military machinery which is the ultimate enforcer of the role of the U.S. as a major world power.

In short: There would be no United States as we now know it today without slavery. That is a simple and basic truth.

Now, of course, slavery was not the only factor that played a significant part in the emergence of the U.S. as a world power, whose economic strength underlies its massive military force. A major historical factor in all this was the theft of land, on a massive scale, from Mexico as well as from native peoples. But, in turn, much of that conquest of land was, for a long period of time up until the Civil War, largely to expand the slave system. “Remember the Alamo,” we are always reminded. Well, many of the “heroes” of the Alamo were slave traders and slave chasers. Forget all that stuff about the Davy Crocketts as great heroes, which many of us were fed as kids—these were slave chasers and slave enforcers, and adventurers who, to a large degree, were aiming to expand the slave system. More fundamentally, whatever the particular role of individuals, the war with Mexico over Texas was, on the part of the United States, most essentially motivated by the drive to spread the slave system. And expanding the slave system was a major aim of the overall war with Mexico, although that war also led to the westward expansion of the developing capitalist system centered in the northern United States (those two systems, those two modes of production, capitalism and slavery, were in competition with each other over which would dominate in the new territory conquered by the United States; this was part of the mounting conflict between them, which then erupted into the Civil War in the 1860s).

Now, if some things had turned out differently, a different United States, or something entirely different altogether, might have evolved in the same territory that now exists as the United States of America (or roughly the same territory), but the United States that did evolve could not have evolved, and would not have reached the position it has, if it were not for the existence and role of slavery in all this. So whenever you hear talk about “freedom” in this country, keep that in mind. Think back to the meaning of the statements by Edmund Morgan which were discussed earlier. Even when we’re talking about actual bourgeois-democratic rights—and let us be clear that this is what we’re talking about, rights within the overall framework of political domination, dictatorship, by the capitalist (bourgeois) class which in fact rules this country—you always have to understand this in dialectical relation with slavery, in the very foundation and in terms of the historical development of the country.

Right now, 0624z, May 30, 2011, hearing Mauritanie again on 7245, not as good as two days ago (now SINPO = 35343), but still pretty good copy of Arabic Q'uran or chanting. Noise a bit higher, Fading = gentle fluttering. FWIW, heard VO Tanzania Zanzibar earlier at 0300z, 6015, SINPO 14331 improving slightly as the hour progressed (owing, I reckon, to the mutual grayline passage).

No, no, John-boy. I asked you to explain how the birth announcements were printed in two newspapers.

How did Obama's mom do it, and show us proof that she did do it that way.

7245 KHz is barely audible today . Heard some voices and little of music around 0630 UTC and then it slowly started to disappear .
Completely . Tried both sync detector,ECSS -- no use . BTW ,BSKSA supposedly uses 7240 KHZ .

Nothing about the newspaper is worthy of any consideration, not by sane men, and certainly not by a court of law.

"Similarly, the newspaper announcements of Obama's birth do not prove he was born in Hawaii, since they could have been triggered by the grandparents registering the birth as Hawaiian, even if the baby was born elsewhere."

http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.printable&pageId=252833

If you are attempting to prove something with an announcement in a newspapers, from the 1960's, it is a sign you have and will lose whatever arguments you are attempting ...

Why would you not argue your case with valid documents, evidence and proofs?

You really need something concrete ... I don't think anyone is going to give much validity to newspapers, one way or another ...

The Constitution went out the window in 1935.when Americas bankruptcy was declared legal.All previous law cases were never again to be used as a refference to the new sepreme law of the land.Everything has been rattified not to use the original constitution as a legitament document!

The Slave owners Constitution has be replaced with National Socialism guidelines,to bring about One World Order/government.

Who Is Running America?

The Bankruptcy of America, the Corporate United States, and the New World Order

From Archive Sources

Who is running America? Have you ever asked that question?
Under the doctrine of Parens Patriae, "Government As Parent", as a result of the manipulated bankruptcy of the United States of America in 1930, ALL the assets of the American people, their person, and of our country itself are held by the Depository Trust Corporation at 55 Water Street, NY, NY, secured by UCC Commercial Liens, which are then monetized as "debt money" by the Federal Reserve. It may interest you to know that under the umbrella of the Depository Trust Corporation lies the CEDE Corporation, the Federal Reserve Corporation, the American Bar Association, the legal arm of the banking interests, and the Internal Revenue Service, the system's collection agency.

Now you know who is running America!
You might want to take exception to the name on the marquee at the entrance to 55 Water Street.

??? . . . "Tower of Power" . . . ???
Another thing to think about -- who owns the media and the news you are fed???
Guess Who??? An Independent Press??? Ha!!!

Did you ever hear of the Independent Treasury Act of 1920? No, you say.... Hmmmmmmm....?

The Independent Treasury Act of 1920 suspended the de jure (meaning "by right of legal establishment") Treasury Department of the United States government. Our Congress turned the treasury department over to a private corporation, which when seen in its true light, is a fascist monopolistic cartel, the Federal Reserve and their agents. The bulk of the ownership of the Federal Reserve System, a very well kept secret from the American Citizen, is held by these banking interests, and NONE is held by the United States Treasury:

Rothschild Bank of London Rothschild Bank of Berlin
Warburg Bank of Hamburg
Warburg Bank of Amsterdam
Lazard Brothers of Paris
Israel Moses Seif Banks of Italy
Chase Manhattan Bank of New York
Goldman, Sachs of New York
Lehman Brothers of New York
Kuhn Loeb Bank of New York
The Federal Reserve is at the root of most of our present statutory regulations, "laws", in the control and regulation of virtually all aspects of human activity in the United States, through successively socialistic constructions laid upon the Commerce clause of the Constitution. Basically, the Federal Reserve is the "STATE" of the United States.

See "Our Enemy, The STATE" by Albert J. Nock - 1935, his Classic Critique Distinguishing "Government" from the "STATE."

Thomas Jefferson once said:

"I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies . . . If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of their currency, first by inflation, then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around [the banks] . . . will deprive the people of all property until their children wake-up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered . . . The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the people, to whom it properly belongs." -- Thomas Jefferson -- The Debate Over The Recharter Of The Bank Bill, (1809)

Jefferson's prophesy has come true.

How did this happen? ......Hmmmmm..... Well, that is going to take a while to explain.
All our law is private law, written by The National Law Institute, Law Professors, and the Bar Association, the Agents of Foreign Banking interests. They have come to this position of writing the law by fraudulently deleting the "Titles of Nobility and Honour" Thirteenth Amendment from the Constitution for the United States, creating an oligarchy of Lawyers and Bankers controlling all three branches of our government. Most of our law comes directly through the Hague or the U.N. Almost all U.N. treaties have been codified into the U.S. codes. That's where all our educational programs originate. The U.N. controls our education system.

The Federal Register Act was created by Pres. Roosevelt in 1935. Title 3 sec. 301 et seq. by Executive Order. He gave himself the power to create federal agencies and appoint a head of the agency. He then re-delegated his authority to make law (statutory regulations) to those agency heads. One big problem there, the president has no constitutional authority to make law. Under the Constitution re-delegation of delegated authority is a felony breach.

The president then gave the agencies the authority to tax. We now have government by appointment running this country. This is the shadow government sometimes spoken about, but never referred to as government by appointment. This type of government represents taxation without representation.

Perhaps this is why some people believe the Constitution was suspended. It wasn't suspended, it was buried in bureaucratic red tape.

Now, it is an historical fact that with the Declaration of Independence, to provide a united effort during and after the War for Independence, the Colonies as independent nations joined together under the Articles of Confederation, and as Independent Sovereign States drew up constitutions which formed governments to serve the people of each former colony. The Articles of Confederation, after a period of 8 years, were determined to have several flaws. The Congress of delegates called a Convention in 1787 to correct the flaws. The Convention, instead of modifying the Articles of Confederation as directed, in secret sessions took it upon themselves to write an entirely new Constitution, which when ratified by the State Conventions of the Freemen of the Individual States, created the Federal government to serve them in those areas where the States operating individually could not effectively serve. In this new Constitution the people and the States delegated to the Federal government certain responsibilities, reserving all rights not so enumerated to the States and to the People in the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution. As a consequence, the responsibility of the State became one of protecting the people from the tyranny of federal government, to insure that the federal government did not reach beyond the bounds of the Constitution. This worked fairly effectively, until 1933 when Roosevelt assumed office.

The Conference of Chief Justices, Conference of State Court Administrators, the National Associations of Attorney Generals, Secretaries of State and State Auditors, State Purchasing Offices, Lieutenant Governors, and State Legislators, and the Governors of the 50 states comprise the membership of the Council of State Governments. The Council of State Governments is located at 676 N. ST. Clair, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

The Council of State Governments has now been absorbed into the National Conference on Uniform State Laws run by the Bar Association.

The movement for uniform state laws dates back more than a century. The Alabama State Bar called for uniformity as early as 1881, but it was nearly a decade later, at the 12th annual meeting of the ABA in 1889, that the legal community made its formal motion to work for uniformity in the then 44 state union. New York was the first state to move, appointing three commissioners in 1890. Other states soon heeded the call: Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania attended the first Conference in Saratoga Springs, New York, in 1892. The commissioners wasted no time. They urged adoption of three acts and proposed raising the marrying age to 18 for males and 16 for females. They also adopted a table of weights and measures, noting that with the exception of wheat, legal weights of a bushel varied in all the states.

By the turn of the century, 33 states and two territories had appointed commissioners on uniform laws. In 1910, only Nevada and the Territory of Alaska still had not; they came aboard in 1912.

100 YEARS OF UNIFORM LAWS
An Abridged Chronology
1890 - New York state legislature passes first state act authorizing governor to appoint three commissioners. The American Bar Association (ABA)recommends that other states follow New York's lead.

1891 - Connecticut's Lyman D. Brewster named to chair newly-created ABA committee on uniform law. Pennsylvania, Michigan, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Delaware appoint commissioners.

1892 - First conference held in Saratoga Springs New York. Above states plus Georgia attend formal meeting.

1893 - Committees appointed on such subjects as wills, marriage and divorce, commercial law, descent and distribution.

1895 - Conference requests committee on commercial law be formed. Drafts, Negotiable Instrument Law, precursor to Article 3 of Uniform Commercial Code.

1896 - Negotiable Instrument Law approved by Conference. First time that a uniform act is adopted in every state and the District of Columbia.

1897 - For the first time, Commissioners urged to work toward enactment of uniform legislation in their states.

1898/1899 - Sessions devoted to the consideration of proposed divorce legislation.

1899 - At the end of the 1890s, 33 of the existing 45 states and two territories had appointed uniform law commissioners and eight uniform acts had been drafted, each enacted in at least one state. All these acts were subsequently superseded or declared obsolete.

1900 - Uniform Divorce Procedure Act adopted. Louis B. Brandeis begins five years of service as member of Massachusetts commission.

1901 - Woodrow Wilson begins tenure (until 1908) as commissioner from New Jersey.

1903 - ABA makes first appropriation in support of work of Conference. James Barr Ames of Harvard Law School commissioned to draft the Uniform Partnership Act.

1905 - Samuel W. Pennypacker, Pennsylvania Governor, invites other governors to send delegation to a national divorce conference--meets twice in 1906; three acts endorsed.

1906 - First roll call by states as Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act is approved. Legal scholar Roscoe Pound serves for one year as a commissioner from Nebraska.

1907 - Uniform Desertion Act and Non-Support Act and Uniform Marriage Act authorized. Act Regulating Annulment of Marriage of Divorce adopted. Also, Act Providing for the Return of Marriage Statistics, Act Providing for the Return of Divorce Statistics.

1908 - Work begins on Uniform Corporation Act.

1910 - Twenty uniform acts approved in decade of the teens. The Uniform Partnership Act, begun in 1906, was completed by William Draper Lewis, Dean of the University of Pennsylvania Law School.

1911 - Uniform Marriage and Marriage License Act and Uniform Child Labor Act approved.

1912 - Uniform Marriage Evasion Act adopted. Woodrow Wilson, commissioner from New Jersey from 1901 to 1908 elected U.S. President in a landslide.

1914 - Uniform Partnership Act completed. Will be adopted by all the states. Also Foreign Acknowledgement Act, Cold Storage Act, Workmens's Compensation Act.

1915 - Name changed to National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. Constitution and by-laws completely revised. Each act now must be considered section by section during at least two annual meetings.

1916 - Uniform Limited Partnership Act as well as Extradition of Persons of Unsound Minds Act approved, also Land Registration Act.

1917 - Uniform Flag Act approved.

1918 - Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act approved.

1920 - Certain Acts withdrawn; others declared obsolete. After pruning, 26 acts remain as recommended for passage in state legislatures.

1930 - During the 30s, Conference adopts 31 acts.

1935 - Conference entered into agreement with American Law Institute for cooperative drafting of acts in area of common interest.

1936 - After revisions, withdrawals and acts declared obsolete, 53 uniform acts remained as recommended for approval.

On April 25, 1938, the Supreme Court overturned the standing precedents of the prior 150 years concerning "COMMON LAW" in the federal government.

"THERE IS NO FEDERAL COMMON LAW, AND CONGRESS HAS NO POWER TO DECLARE SUBSTANTIVE RULES OF COMMON LAW applicable IN A STATE, WHETHER they be LOCAL or GENERAL in their nature, be they COMMERCIAL LAW or a part of LAW OF TORTS." (See: ERIE RAILROAD CO. vs. THOMPKINS, 304 U.S. 64, 82 L. Ed. 1188)

The Common Law is the fountain source of Substantive and Remedial Rights, if not our very Liberties. The members and associates of the Bar thereafter formed committees, granted themselves special privileges, immunities and franchises, and held meetings concerning the Judicial procedures, and further, to amend laws "to conform to a trend of judicial decisions or to accomplish similar objectives", including hodgepodging the jurisdictions of Law and Equity together, which is known today as "One Form of Action." [See: Constitution and By Laws, Article 3, Section 3.3(c), 1990-91 Reference Book, see also Colorado Methods of Practice, West Publishing, Vol. 4, pages 2-3, Authors Comments.]

1939 - ABA gets more involved in approval of uniform law products. Thirty-nine acts are presented to the Board of Governors of the ABA for consideration and approval. During the same year, all acts on aeronautics and motor vehicles are eliminated as well as the Land Registration Act, Child Labor Act of 1930, Uniform Divorce Jurisdiction Act, Firearms Act, Marriage Act and more. Six acts are reclassified as Model acts.

1940 - At start of decade, after deletions, etc., 53 acts out of 93 which had been approved since the group's founding remain on the books. Drafting committee for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) approved.

1941 - Speaking of the Commercial Code project, the Conference president states: "....this is the most important and the most far reaching project on which the conference has ever embarked." It would take the major part of the next 10 tear period to complete.

1942 - UCC effort begins in earnest with completion of work on the revised Uniform Sales Act.

1943 - Members of the conference participate in drafting committee in Washington, D.C. to work on legislation which the government might desire in connection with the war effort. No new acts.

1944 - Conference receives $150,000 grant from the Falk Foundation of Pittsburgh to support work on the UCC.

1945 - No annual meeting for the first time due to difficulties of civilian transport during the war.

1946 - Falk Foundation increases its support of the UCC with an additional $100,000.

1947 - Uniform Law Conference (ULC) and American Law Institute join in partnership to put all the components together for the UCC. Uniform Divorce Recognition Act approved.

1950 - Approval of the Uniform Marriage License Application Act, Uniform Adoption Act and the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA). The latter has been one of the most successful ULC products.

1951 - On May 18, during a joint meeting with the American Law Institute in Washington, D.C., the UCC was approved. Later that year the ABA formally approved the code as well. Considered the outstanding accomplishment of the Conference, the Code remains the ULC's signature product.

One of the Uniform Laws drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and the American Law Institute governing commercial transactions (including sales and leasing of goods, transfer of funds, commercial paper, bank deposits and collections, letters of credit, bulk transfers, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, investment securities, and secured transactions), The Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), has been adopted in whole or substantially by all states. (See: Blacks Law, 6th Ed. pg. 1531) In essence, all court decisions are based on commercial law or business law and has criminal penalties associated with it. Rather than openly calling this new law Admiralty/Maritime Jurisdiction, it is called Statutory Jurisdiction.

America as a bankrupt nation is owned completely by its creditors.

The creditors own the Congress, they own the Executive, they own the Judiciary and they own all the State governments. Do you have a Birth Certificate? They own you too.

1952 - Uniform Rules of Criminal Procedure approved---first venture of the Conference into this area of the law.

1953 - Pennsylvania the first state to enact the UCC. Uniform Rules of Evidence adopted.

1954 - Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act approved.

1956 - Gift to Minors Act approved. Will be adopted in every state. For the first time, ULC enters the field of international law.

1957 - Massachusetts becomes second state to enact the UCC, after revisions by the Editorial Board.

1958 - Uniform Securities Act approved.

1960 - Uniform Paternity Act passed. by 1960, UCC enacted in Kentucky, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

1961 - Permanent Editorial Board on the UCC formed---8 more states pass UCC. Constitution amended to provide that all members of Conference must be members of the bar.

1962 - Four more states adopt UCC, including New York. Probate Code project approved.

1963 - Third comprehensive law project approved, on retail installment sales, consumer credit, small loans and usury. Eleven more UCC states. William H. Renquist begins term as commissioner from Arizona; serves until 1968.

1964 - Special Committee of Uniform Divorce and Marriage laws recommends that a study of divorce law be authorized and that funds be sought. One more UCC state.

1965 - Divorce and Marriage Law committee instructed to commence drafting if funds can be obtained for the project. Thirteen more UCC states.

1966 - Five more UCC states.

1968 - Much of annual meeting devoted to the Uniform Consumer Credit Code and the Uniform Probate Code ---two projects nearing completion. By 1968, 49 states, the District of Columbia and U.S. Virgin Islands have enacted the UCC---only exception being Louisiana. A big year. Other developments in 1968: the Consumer Credit Code is approved as well as revisions to the Anatomical Gift Act, Child Custody Jurisdiction Act and revisions to URESA.

1969 - Probate Code approved. Preliminary analysis of the uniform marriage and divorce legislation distributed.

1970 - Controlled Substances Act and Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act approved.

1971 - Uniform Alcoholism and Intoxication Act approved.

1972 - Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, Disposition of Community Property Rights At Death Act and UMVARA, the Uniform Motor Vehicle Accident Reparations Act approved.

1973 - Uniform Parentage Act supersedes Paternity Act. Uniform Crime Victims Reparations Act approved.

1974 - Conference approves Rules of Criminal Procedure and Eminent Domain Code. Louisiana, the only state not to adopt the Uniform Commercial Code due to difficulties in reconciling its provisions with those of the Civil Code, adopts Articles 1,3,4,5,7, and 8.

1975 - Uniform Land Transactions Act approved.

1976 - Major revision of the Uniform Partnership Act approved; also Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers and Uniform Class Action Acts.

1978 - Uniform Brain Death and Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act approved.

1979 - Uniform Trade Secrets and Durable Power of Attorney acts among those approved.

1980 - Determination of Death Act supersedes 1978 Brain Death Act. Uniform Planned Community Act, Model Real Estate Time-Share Act and Model Periodic Payment of Judgments Act also adopted.

1981 - Two important updated acts approved: new Model State Administration Procedure and Unclaimed Property Acts. Also two new acts: the Model Real Estate Cooperative Act and the Uniform Conservation Easement Act.

1982 - Uniform Condominium and Planned Community Acts and Model Real Estate Cooperative Act combined into the Uniform Common Interest Ownership act.

The enumerated, specified, and distinct Jurisdictions established by the ordained Constitution (1789), Article III, Section 2, and under the Bill of Rights (1791), Amendment VII, were further hodgepodged and fundamentally changed in 1982 to include Admiralty Jurisdiction, which was once again brought inland. This was the FUNDAMENTAL CHANGE necessary to effect unification of CIVIL and ADMIRALTY PROCEDURE. Just as 1938 Rules ABOLISHED THE DISTINCTION between Actions At Law and Suits in Equity, this CHANGE WOULD ABOLISH THE DISTINCTION between CIVIL ACTIONS and SUITS IN ADMIRALTY." (See: Federal Rules of Procedure, 1982 Ed., pg. 17. Also see Federalist Papers, No. 83, Declaration Of Resolves Of The First Continental Congress, Oct. 14th, 1774, Declaration Of Cause And Necessity Of Taking Up Arms, July 16, 1775, Declaration Of Independence, July 4, 1776, Bennet vs. Butterworth, 52 U.S. 669)

1983 - Uniform Marital Property Act and Uniform Premarital agreement Act approved. Uniform Transfers to Minors Act replaces the uniformly enacted Uniform Gifts to Minors Act.

1984 - Uniform Statutory Will Act approved; new Uniform fraudulent Transfer Act supersedes Fraudulent Conveyance Act of 1918.

1985 - Uniform Health-Care Information Act, Uniform Land Security Interest act, Uniform Personal Property Leasing Act and Uniform Rights of the Terminally Ill Act approved.

1986 - New drafting effort to revise Articles 3 and 4 of the UCC and draft new provisions begins.

1987 - Approval of the revised Uniform Anatomical Gift Act approved as well as new Uniform Custodial Trust Act, Uniform Construction Lien Act and Uniform Franchise and Business Opportunities Act. Also revision of Rules of Criminal Procedure.

1988 - Final approval of amendments to the Uniform Securities Act and amendments to Article 6 of the UCC dealing with bulk sales. Conference also approves Uniform Statutory Form Power of Attorney Act and Uniform Punitive and Unknown Fathers Act and takes on the controversial issue of surrogate mother contracts with Uniform Status of Children of Assisted Conception Act.

1989 - Article 4A of the UCC, dealing with electronic funds transfers, approved. Also approved: amendments to the Rights of the Terminally Ill Act, authorizing withdrawal of life support by a surrogate decision maker; the Uniform Pretrial Detention Act, confining violent criminals before trial; the Uniform Non-probate Transfers on Death Act and amendments to Article VI of the Uniform Probate Code.

1990 - Major revision of 1970 Uniform Controlled Substances Act-- the law in 46 jurisdictions-- approved. Substantial revision of UCC Article 3 also approved, as well as an updated Article II of the Uniform Probate Code, to keep pace with current thinking on marital property.

This private corruption of the law has occurred despite the Constitutional responsibility conferred on Congress by Article I, Section 8 of the Federal Constitution which states that it is Congress that "makes all Laws."

What does that have to do with anything? Uniform Laws seem to be a good Idea.

Well now, that is a good question. Let us continue.....

An Expose On The Legal Fraud Perpetrated On All Americans
THE COURTS RECOGNIZE ONLY TWO CLASSES OF PEOPLE IN THE UNITED STATES TODAY: DEBTORS AND CREDITORS

The concept of DEBTORS and CREDITORS is very important to understand.

Every legal action where you are brought before the court: e.g. traffic ticket, property dispute or permits, income tax, credit cards, bank loans or anything else government might dream up to charge you where you find yourself in front of a court. It is an equity court, administrating commercial law having a debtor-creditor law as the controlling law. Today, we have an equity court but not an equity court as defined by the Constitution of the United States or any other legal documents before 1938.

All the courts of this once great land have been changed starting with the Supreme Court decision of 1938 in ERIE V. THOMPKINS. I'll give you background which led to this decision. There is a terrible FRAUD being perpetrated on all Americans. Please understand that this fraud is a 24 hour, 7 days a week, year after year continuous fraud. This fraud is constantly upon you all your life. It doesn't just happen once in a while. This fraud is perpetually and incessantly upon you and your family.

U.S. INC. GOES TO GENEVA 1930's
In order for you to understand just how this fraud works, you need to know the history of its inception.

It goes like this: From 1928 -1932 there were five years of Geneva conventions. The nations of the world met in Geneva Switzerland for 5 continuous years in order to set up what would be the policy of all the participating countries. During the year of 1930 the U.S., Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Portugal etc. all declared bankruptcy. If you try to look up the 1930 minutes, you will not find them because they don't publish this particular volume. If you try to find the 1930 volume which contains the minutes of what happened, you will probably not find it. This volume has been pulled out of circulation or is hidden in the library and is very hard to find. This volume contains the evidence of the bankruptcy.

Going into 1932, they stopped meeting in Geneva. In 1932 Franklin Roosevelt came into power as President of the United States. Roosevelt's job was to put into place and administer the bankruptcy that had been declared two years earlier. The corporate government needed a key Supreme Court decision. The corporate United States government had to have a legal case on the books to set the stage for recognizing, implementing and supporting the bankruptcy. Now. this doesn't mean the bankruptcy wasn't implemented before 1938 with the Erie vs. Thompkins decision. The bankruptcy started in 1930-1931. The bankruptcy definitely started when Roosevelt came into office. He was sworn in during the month of January 1933. He started right away in the bankruptcy with what is known as 'The Banking Holiday," and proceeded in pulling the gold coin out of circulation. That was the beginning of the corporate United States Public Policy for bankruptcy.. Executive Orders 6073, 6102, 6111 & Executive Order 6260 "Trading With The Enemy Act."

ROOSEVELT STACKS SUPREME COURT
It is a known historical fact that during 1933 and 1937 - 1938, there was a big fight between Roosevelt and the Supreme Court Justices. Roosevelt tried to stack the Supreme court with a bunch of his pals. Roosevelt tried to enlarge the number of justices and he tried to change the slant of the justices. The corporate United States had to have one Supreme Court case which would support their bankruptcy problem.

There was resistance to Roosevelt's court stacking efforts. Some of the justices tried to warn us that Roosevelt was tampering with the law and with the courts. Roosevelt was trying to see to it that prior decisions of the court were overturned. He was trying to bring in a new order, a new procedure for the law of the land. See also The UCC Connection

THE CORPORATE UNITED STATES GOES BANKRUPT
A bankruptcy case was needed on the books to legitimize the fact that the corporate U.S. had already declared bankruptcy! This bankruptcy was effectuated by compact that the corporate several states had with the corporate government (Corporate Capitol of the several corporate states). This compact tied the corporate several states to corporate Washington D.C, (the headquarters of the corporation called "The United States").

Since the United States Corporation, having established its headquarters within the District of Columbia, declared itself to be in the state of bankruptcy, it automatically declared bankruptcy for all its subsidiaries who were effectively connected corporate members (who happened to be the corporate state governments of the Union). The corporate state governments didn't have to vote on the bankruptcy. The bankruptcy automatically became effective by reason of the Compact/ Agreement between each of the corporate state governments and THE MOTHER CORPORATION. (Note: the liberty of using the term "Mother Corporation" to communicate the interconnected power of the corporate Federal government relative to her associated corporate States has been taken.

It is Historical knowledge that the original Union States created the Federal Government, however, for all practical purposes, the Federal government has taken control of her "Creators", the States.) She has become a beast out of control for power. She has for her trade names the following: "United States", "U.S.", "U.S.A.", "United States of America", Washington D.C., District of Columbia, Feds. and Federal Government. She has her own U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, Parks, Post Office etc. etc. etc. Because she is claiming to be bankrupt, she freely gives her land, her personnel, and the money she steals from the Americans via the IRS. and her state corporations, to the United Nations and the International Bankers as payment for her debt. The UN and the International Bankers use this money and services for various world wide projects, including war.

War is an extremely lucrative business for the bankers of the New World Order. Loans for destruction. Loans for re-construction. Loans for controlling people in her new world order.

THE U.S. INC. DECLARES BANKRUPTCY
The corporate U.S. then, is the head corporate member, who met at Geneva to decide for all its corporate body members. The corporate representatives of the corporate several states were in attendance. If the states had their own power to declare bankruptcy regardless of whether Washington D.C. declared bankruptcy or not, then the several states would have been represented at Geneva. The several states of America were not represented. Consequently, whatever Washington D.C. agreed to at Geneva was passed on automatically, via compact to the several corporate states as a group, association, corporation or as a club member; they all agreed and declared bankruptcy as one government corporate group in 1930. The several states only needed a representative at Geneva by way of the U.S. in Washington D.C. The delegates of the corporate United States attended the meetings and spoke for the several corporate states as well as for the Federal Corporate Government. And, presto, BANKRUPTCY was declared for all!

From 1930 to 1938 the states could not enact any law or decide any case that would go against the Federal Government. The case had to come down from the Federal level so that the states could then rely on the Federal decision and use this decision within the states as justification for the bankruptcy process within the states.

UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE EMERGES AS LAW OF THE LAND
Ah, Ha, are you beginning to get the picture?
By 1938 the corporate Federal Government had the true bankruptcy case they had been looking for. Now, the bankruptcy that had been declared back in 1930 could be upheld and administered. That's why the Supreme Court had to be stacked and made corrupt from within. The new players on the Supreme Court fully understood that they had to destroy all other case law that had been established prior to 1938. The Federal Government had to have a case to destroy all precedent, all appearance, and even the statute of law itself. That is, the Statutes at large had to be perverted. They finally got their case in Erie vs. Thompkins. It was right after that case that the American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws listed right in the front of the Uniform Commercial Code, began creating the Uniform Commercial Code that is on our backs today. Let us quote directly from the preface of the Official Text of the Uniform Commercial Code 12th Edition:

"The Code was originally approved by its sponsors and the American Bar Association in 1952, and was revised in 1958 to incorporate a number of changes that had been recommended by the New York Law Revision Commission and other agencies. Subsequent amendments that were deemed desirable in light of experience under the Code were approved by the Permanent Editorial Board in 1962 and 1966"

The above named groups and associations of private lawyers got together and started working on the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC). It was somewhere between 1938 and 1940, I don't recall, but by the early 40's and during the war, this committee was working to form the UCC and getting it ready to go on the market. The UCC is the Law Merchant's code for the administration of the bankruptcy. The UCC is now the law of the land as far as the courts are concerned. This Legal Committee of lawyers put everything: Negotiable Instruments, Security, Sales, Contracts, and the whole mess under the UCC. That's where the "Uniform" word comes from. It means it was uniform from state to state as well as being uniform with the District of Columbia.

It doesn't mean you didn't have the uniform instrument laws on the books before this time. It means the laws were not uniform from state to state. By the middle 1960's, every state had passed the UCC into law. The states had no choice but to adopt newly formed Uniform Commercial Code as the Law of the Land. The states fully understood they had to administrate Bankruptcy. Washington D.C. adopted the Uniform Commercial Code in 1963, just six weeks after President John F. Kennedy was killed.

YOUR LAWYER'S SECRET OATH???
What was the effect and the significance of Erie vs. Thompkins case decision of 1938? The significance is that since the Erie Decision, no cases are allowed to be cited that are prior to 1938. There can be no mixing of the old law with the new law. The lawyers, who are members of the American Bar Association, were and are currently under and controlled by the Lawyer's guild of Great Britain, created, formed, and implemented the new bankruptcy law. The American Bar Association is a franchise of the Lawyer's Guild of Great Britain.

Since the Erie vs. Thompkins case was decided, the practice of law in this country was never again to be the same. It has been reported, that every lawyer in existence, and every lawyer coming up has to take a "secret" oath to support bankruptcy. As Officers of the Court they have sworn to uphold the law as it exists, and as they have been taught. In so doing, not only do the lawyers promise to support the bankruptcy, but the lawyers and judges promise never to reveal who the true creditor/party is in the bankruptcy proceedings (if, indeed, many of them are even aware or know). In court, there is never identification and appearance of the true character and principle of the proceedings. If there is no appearance of the true party to the action, then there is no way the defendant is able to know the TRUE NATURE AND CAUSE OF THE ACTION. You are never told the true NATURE AND CAUSE OF WHY YOU ARE IN FRONT OF THEIR COURT. The court is forbidden to tell you that information.

That's why, if you question the true nature and cause, the judge will tell you "It's not my job to tell you. You are not retaining me as an attorney and I can't give you legal advice from the bench. I suggest you hire a lawyer."

HIRE A LAWYER?
The problem here is, if you hire a lawyer who is pledged not to reveal the true nature and the cause, how will you ever find out the nature and the cause? YOU WON'T! If the true nature and the cause of the action against you is revealed, it will expose the real creditor from whom this action and cause came. In other words, they will have to name the TRUE creditor. The true creditor will have to state the nature and the cause. The true creditor will have to say "It's a bankruptcy proceeding." The true creditor will have to say, "I'm the creditor and he's the debtor."

That declaration would open the door for you to question "Who the hell are you? How did you get attached to my back and by what vehicle did I promise to become a debtor to you?" In this country, the courts on every level, from the justice of the peace level all the way up..... even into the International law arena, (called the World Court), are administrating the bankruptcy and are pledged not to reveal who the true creditors really are and how you personally became pledged as a party or participant to the corporate United States debt. What would really kill these people off, would be to compel the International Bankers to send a lawyer into the courtroom and present himself as the attorney for THE TRUE CREDITOR, THE INTERNATIONAL BANKERS. THEN, HAVE THE ATTORNEY PUT INTO THE RECORD THE TRUE NATURE AND CAUSE OF THE PROCEEDING AGAINST YOU ON THAT PARTICULAR DAY.

The International Bankers told these various countries that they were now in a state of bankruptcy. The countries had been taken over by the creditor/bankers. And there was no choice, but for all these participating countries to declare bankruptcy. If they didn't agree to declare bankruptcy, the bankers threatened to collapse the economies and thereby put the countries back into the depression like the one from which they were just emerging. The bankers made an offer they couldn't refuse. To review and elaborate: In 1930 there was a world wide depression.

The Bankers said, "Look. You can do it either of two ways. The easy way or the hard way." "You just accept the bankruptcy and we'll let you out of the depression. If you don't, you're on your own." So all the countries involved agreed, because they realized that the International bankers had them by the throat. The countries therefore agreed that over a period of several years that they would pass statutes and legislation for the implementation of the bankruptcy in favor of the international bankers.

Now, it would probably be correct to say that the key bankers were the Rothschild's and their agents by way of Rockefeller, by way of the Federal Reserve Bank. Who the bankers were is immaterial. The fact remains that there was an International bankruptcy, and an International conspiracy to cover it up. There was a banking creditor who made the offer; the countries accepted the offer in order to enable the representative countries to continue without revolution and to allow the politicians to remain comfortably in place. Under a delusion of solvency the countries were allowed to continue to operate as though they were solvent; while in fact, the representative countries were bankrupt.

THE SNARE
The bankruptcy scheme was/is an extremely clever and diabolical plan. How did they possibly pull this scheme off in the area of real estate? The bankers did it with real estate, the same way they did it in the area of Federal Income Taxes. These Foreign bankers simply and deceptively devised ways and means to con you into declaring yourself as a "CITIZEN" or a "RESIDENT" of the corporate U.S. Remember the corporate United States is Bankrupt per agreement and public policy. After you have been tricked into claiming you are one of their corporate United States Citizens, you are given a social security number which ties you to certain meager "benefits" and "privileges."Then, the bankers con your employer to function as an unpaid tax collector to con you into filling out their W-4 intangible property gift forms and 1040 voluntary agreements.

These slick paper agreements establish your "voluntary" indebtedness to the banker creditor. If at any time you decide to balk at this scheme because you don't like it, the real creditor never has to make an appearance in court to list the true nature and cause of the action which is being brought against you. You end up dealing with an agency. The agency can conveniently grant itself immunity from prosecution because all it is doing (without your knowledge, of course) is administrating the bankruptcy to which the government agreed to per the Geneva meetings.

The court system never lets you put the original creditor on the courtroom stand, so you can ask him how he got attached to your back. The system is set up in such a way that the true creditor is protected and never has to make an appearance and never has to answer any of your questions or produce documents. Therefore, the true creditor never has to produce the law that gives him the right to pledge you (your body and labor) into indebtedness (bondage/servitude).

Why? Because the Geneva agreement in 1930 was done by treaty. The bankruptcy was not done by legislation. The agreement came first; signed in secrecy, THEN Congress began to pass legislation to fulfill the bankruptcy obligation required by the treaty. Legislation being passed by Congress was henceforth and is thereby bankruptcy legislation. When cases came before the courts, the courts could make decisions based on the new controlling law of bankruptcy. It had nothing to do with Constitutional rights. Now, any case brought in is under the new bankruptcy law and is not considered as a true constitutional case. It is now a bankrupty case as distinct from, but cleverly disguised as a constitutional case.

THE FRAUD
The members of the Supreme Court, of course, realized what was happening to them and the system of law. The court was being asked to perform in a creditor, debtor bankrupt proceeding to the benefit of the banker creditors. The members of the Supreme Court said, "NO. We will not give you a bankrupt proceeding decision that you can then enforce against everybody; a decision not only effecting corporate Washington D.C. but also having effect within the corporate state governments."

This, by the way, is fraud. It wouldn't be fraud if the government of corporate Washington D.C. and the government of the several corporate states declared bankruptcy then let the people know about the bankruptcy. (Notice: when I say corporate "government" I don't mean you and me. You and I are not the corporate government. The corporate government is the corporate capital of the corporate state. The government is a neutral government zone known as the corporate capital of the corporate state. The government is where the corporate state is. It is corporate headquarters. Just like corporate Washington D.C. is the seat of the corporate Federal Government. The capital of the corporate state is the seat of the corporate state government. If the corporate Federal Government and her subsidiary corporate state governments want to join forces and declare bankruptcy that's not fraud. This is their corporate business.

However, it is fraud when those two corporate entities declare bankruptcy but do not disclose to you, me, and every other American, that they have so declared bankruptcy.

Further they have not and do not disclose that their intention is to get you and every other American in this country to pledge to pay off their corporate debt to their corporate creditors. The corporate bankruptcy is the corporate state and federal responsibility, not the responsibility of Americans, The People.

U.S. INC. IS DISTINCT AND SEPARATE FROM PRIVATE AMERICANS
"We the People" who created and signed the contract/compact/agreement/ charter of, by, and for the Constitutional Corporation (U.S.) using the trade name of the "United States of America," is a corporate entity (legal fiction) which is DISTINCT AND SEPARATE from Americans or the unenfranchised people of America. The private natural American people did not create the corporation of the United States. The United States Inc. did not create the private natural American people. America and Americans were in existence prior to the creation of the United States Corporation. The United States Corporation has located its U.S. headquarters in Washington D.C.

Virginia State (state territory) gave land to the newly formed United States Corporation. Notice here, we have a state giving something of value (land) to the United States. The United Stales Corporation agreed in the Constitutional contract, to protect the States. Instead, because of their bankruptcy (Corporate U.S. Bankruptcy) this particular U.S. corporation has enslaved the States and the people by deception and at the will of their foreign bankers with whom they have been doing business. Our forefathers gave their lives and property to prevent enslavement.

Today, we are again enslaved. Private natural American people have been tricked, deceived, and set-up to carry the U.S. Inc. perpetual corporate debt under bankruptcy laws. Every time Americans appear in court, the corporate U.S. bankruptcy is being administrated against them without their knowledge and lawful consent. That is FRAUD.

All corporate bankruptcy administration is done by "Public Policy" of by and for the Mother Corporation (U.S. Inc.).

THE MOTHER CORPORATION'S "PUBLIC POLICY"
The corporate bankruptcy is carried out under the corporate public policy of the corporate Federal Government in corporate Washington D.C. The states use state public policy to carry out Federal public policy of Washington D.C. Public policy and only public policy is being administered against you in the corporate courts today. The public policy that is dictated by all the courts, from the smallest to the most powerful courts in the world, is public policy. This is why I said, in another tape that the Russian people would be enslaved into indebtedness. What will happen is that it will become public policy in Russia to have the people go into joint corporate debt. The Russians will be forced to promise to pay those debts. They will be forced to pay off on those corporate debts. Corporate public policy is the crux of the whole bankruptcy implementation. Corporate public policy is forever a Corporate public policy and the laws that have passed since 1938 are all corporate public policy laws dealing only with corporate public policy. Understand that U.S. corporate public policy is not an American public policy. The public policy is OF, (belonging to) the United States corporation. This U.S. corporate bankruptcy public policy is not OF (belonging to) America, the Republic.

The Erie vs. Thompkins 1938 case was a decision based upon public policy. All decisions at any level since 1938, have been public policy decisions. All statutes, rules, regulations, and procedures that have been passed, whether civil or criminal, whether it is Federal or State, have all been passed to implement the public policy of bankruptcy. Since 1933, when FDR came into office, he brought in public policy. He established that it was the public policy of the overnment to call in all the gold. It was the public policy of the government to declare a banking holiday. It was the public policy of the Government in Washington D.C., (the Federal Government) to give out government assistance. Public policy operates the same within the states. All Federal court decisions can only be handed down if the states support Federal public policy. The state legal system must be compatible with the Federal legal system.

THE MONKEY-WRENCH
This is why, when people like us go to court without being represented by a lawyer, we throw a monkey-wrench into their corporate administrative proceedings. Why? Because all public policy corporate lawyers are pledged to up-hold public policy, which is the corporate U.S. administration of their corporate bankruptcy. That's why you'll find stamped on many if not all our briefs, "THIS CASE IS NOT TO BE CITED IN ANY OTHER CASE AND IS NOT TO BE REPORTED IN ANY COURTS." The reason for this notation is that when we go in to defend ourselves or file a claim we are not supporting the corporate bankruptcy administration and procedure. The arguments we put forth predate 1938.

We come in with Constitutional law etc. All these early cases support our rights not to be in bankruptcy. However, the corporate court, lawyers, and judges have promised to give no judicial recognition of any case before 1938.

THE INTERNATIONAL BANKERS'
CORPORATE PLANTATION
U.S.A. STYLE
Before 1938, the law was not a public policy law. All these old cases were not public law deciding cases. Today, the cases are all decided under corporate public policy. The public policy exists in order to administer the bankruptcy for the benefit of the banker creditors and to protect the banker creditor.

Corporate public policy can allow the creditor to say to the corporate legislatures, "I want a law passed requiring my debtors to wear seat belts. Why? Because I want to be able to milk my debtors for the longest period possible."

It doesn't behoove the creditor to allow all of his labor producing debtors die at an average age 30 years. What would happen to the bankers' lending, interest, penalties, increase, repayment etc., on the entire funding and lending process if the average American life span was only 30 years? Why, the bankers would have to have 2 1/2 times the current consumer population to equal their current take. The bankers would need (instead of 250 million Americans) 600 million or even more. Maybe the bankers would need 2 Billion Americans because the individual can't contract for debt until he/she is 18 or 21 years of age. Therefore, if the average life span is only a 30 year period, the creditor could collect on the debt for only 12 years.

Now, if the bankers can just get people to live an average of 70 years) you are talking a whopping 50 years of indebtedness for which they contract and for which they are forced to pay back with usury/ interest. With this situation, the banker creditor can now float loans worth 50 years of potential indebtedness and its payoff with interest in the name of the people, as opposed to 9 to 12 years.

The creditors and their property and their people are well taken care of. The creditor doesn't want the population to decrease per se, unless, it is convenient for the debtor to run up debts in another's name and then liquidate that debtor or that group of debtor people. For example let's consider the AIDS problem today among the black people. What better group to inject AIDS into than the black people?

Read the Strecker Memorandum on AIDS and the World Health Organization connection. This documents their tainted vaccination program in Africa and elsewhere. Why not kill them off? Don't you understand that the blacks as a whole have absorbed all the debt that they can? The blacks have reached the maximum of the debt that they can carry. In fact, they have gone over their limit to pay back. They are now heavily into welfare, public housing, medicaid, medicare, food stamps etc.. Now, the situation is that instead of paying off the creditor, they have become a drain on the creditor. The creditor must now pay them to live and take care of them. What creditor in his right mind wants to spend money on a bunch of people from whom he can't collect any revenue?

The corporate public policy of the corporate United States and the states and the county and of the cities are that YOU must take care of these people. You must provide them with welfare etc. Why? Because when you, as a member of the corporate body politic allow laws to be passed which says the minorities must be taken care of, then the corporate legislature can say the public policy is that the people want these people taken care of. Therefore, when given the chance, the legislature can say the public policy is that the people want these blacks and poor whites to be taken care of and given a chance, therefore, we must raise taxes to fund all these benefits, privileges and opportunities.

This is what these people need to make them socially, politically, and economically equal with everyone else. The legislatures have passed all kinds of statutes providing for huge indebtedness and they float the indebtedness off your backs because you have never gone into court to challenge them by telling them it is not your public policy to assume the debts of other people. On the contrary, all the court decisions coming put, indicate it is the corporate public policy and it is your willingness to support the corporate public policy to pay off these debts.

Remember, "public" means of and for the corporate Government. It does not mean of and for private people. "Public" means corporate government. It is corporate government policy. When they talk about public debt, they are talking about corporate government debt and your presumed pledge against this corporate created debt.

THE REAL ESTATE SNARE
How do they work this scheme in the area of real estate? These banker creeps have made an agreement that it is corporate public policy, that all land (property) be pledged to the creditor to satisfy the debt of the bankruptcy, which the creditor claims under bankruptcy. They get away with this the same way they get away with any other case that is brought before the court, whether it is a traffic ticket, IRS, or whatever.

Here is how it works. You have signed instruments giving information and jurisdiction to the bankers through their agents. The instruments (forms) you signed include, but are not limited to the following: social security registration, use of the social security number, IRS forms, driver license, traffic citation, jury duty, voter registration, using their address, zip code, U.S. postal service, a deed, a mortgage application, etc. etc. The bankers then use that instrument (document) under the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) as a contract/agreement. These documents are considered promissory contract where you promise to perform. This scheme involves you, without you ever becoming directly in contact or in contract with the true creditor. What's more, you are never informed as to whom that true creditor is and it is never divulged to you the true nature and the true cause of the paperwork that you are filling out.

If you will examine your real estate deed, you will find that you promised to pay taxes to the corporate government. On property you originally acquired through a mortgage, you will notice that the bank never promised to pay taxes. You did. The corporate government at all levels never promised to pay taxes to the creditor. You did.

In tax and collection problems relating to real estate being enforced against you, you will notice that there is no mention in the mortgage or the deed stating the true nature and cause of the action. Since you have made the promise to perform, you get a bill every year for property taxes. You don't realize that the only way they can bill you for taxes is through your own stupidity of agreeing to pay the tax. You volunteered. They took advantage of you, conning you to promise to pay properly taxes. When they send you their bill, they are coming against you for the collection of the promise you made to the creditor.

Now the creditor on the paperwork appears that it is the local bank. The bank has loaned you credit. The bank hasn't loaned you anything. It is not their credit to loan. This is why the bank can't loan credit. There is a credit involved, but not the bank's credit. It is the credit of the International Bankers. The International bankers are making you the loan based upon their operation of bankruptcy claim which they presume to have against you personally as well as your property. Now, let's say you get a tax bill and you decide "I'm not going to pay it." You will find that the courts and the lawyers and the county agencies are set up to protect the true creditor simply by not identifying the creditor. By not being identified as the true creditor, the international banker can make you a credit loan that has no value in reality.

In the case of real property, he claims to loan you the use of your own property for which you pay a tax as rent. He is allowed to do this because you are presumed by statutory law and the banker to be in bankruptcy. This fraud is not revealed because he does not have to make an appearance in court to present and defend his claim. His name is not mentioned in the case.

Let's say you are not aware of your remedies provided for you within the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC). The UCC provides or allows you to dishonor the county's presentment of the tax bill. You don't pay your tax bill. You, therefore, just sit on it and don't do or say anything. A couple of years go by and all of a sudden you are being sent letters to pay up what is owed or else in a certain period of time, your property will be taken from you and put up for tax sale.

Now here is what is interesting..... If you don't pay your tax bill and they contact you asking you to pay it and you don't do it, they will declare that you are in default. It is based on that default, as provided for in the UCC, that they sell your property for the tax (rent).

However, the county never goes into court to put into the record the identification of the real creditor. And the county does not state the true nature and cause of the action against you (bankruptcy action disguised as a tax action). Why? Because, under bankruptcy implementation, they have developed a legal procedure which is based upon your promise to pay. This procedure provides that they don't have to come to the court to get a court order authorizing the sale of your property. Therefore, the real creditor never makes an appearance in court.

The reality is, you are denied any possibility of appearing in court to exercise your right to challenge the creditor. To ask if he became the creditor under "public policy." To ask if it is under "public policy", just what is the "public policy?" And how did you (as an international banker) become "creditor" to me and everyone else in this country (American people). They don't want you to ask the real creditor (the International Bankers), to produce the documents upon which your personal debt is established. If they were forced to go into court, they would have to produce the deed or mortgage showing you knowingly, willingly, and voluntarily promised to pay the corporate public debt. You did not knowingly, willingly, and voluntarily promise to pay any U.S. Corporate Bankruptcy obligation made in the 1930's.

This would, of course, expose their racket. The fact is, that, there was absolutely no debt connected to you until you agreed to it through their deception and fraud. The deception in a broader sense, permeates the education system and the news media, etc., to sell you on the idea that you are a statutory "U.S. citizen" and "resident of the United States." (INCORPORATED).

YOUR SIGNATURE IS YOUR MOST VALUABLE PROPERTY
Your property is pledged for the rest of your life upon your signature and your promise to perform is pledged into perpetual debt. The bankers don't even bother to go to court They leave it up to the agencies to administer the agency corporate public policy. It is the public policy of that agency to bill you on your promise to perform. If you don't pay, they follow up on the public policy on notice of default and give you one more chance to pay. Then they proceed to sell the property at a tax auction. They never go to court or appear in court to back up their claim against you. Did any of your government licensed and controlled teachers ever stress that your signature is your most valuable personal property? Did your government teachers ever tell you that any time you sign any document, you should sign it "without prejudice," or with "All Rights Reserved" above your signature. This means you are reserving your God given unalienable rights which cannot be transferred and all other rights for which your forefathers died.

The Corporate U.S.. Government provides, or at best pretends to provide for this reservation of rights under the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) 1-207 and 1-103. You need more information in this area. It is not in the best interest of the United States Corporate "PUBLIC" schools to teach you about their bankruptcy proceedings and how they have set the snare to Compel you into paying their debt. The Corporate "PUBLIC" schools are strictly designed for their Corporate citizen/ subjects. That is. the Corporate U.S.. Public School citizens.

Notice all the emphases on being a "good" Citizen. Basically all their teachers and their students are trained to produce labor and material in exchange for valueless green paper called "money." It is not money, it functions "AS" money. Lawful money must be backed by something of value. Bankers take your labor, services, and material (homes, cars, farms, etc.) in exchange for their valueless corporate paper. This paper is backed only by the "full faith and Confidence of the United States Government" THE MOTHER CORPORATION.

I do not have faith or confidence in the U.S. BANKRUPT CORPORATE GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATORS WHO HAVE PERVERTED THEIR Constitutional CHARTER, enslaving the sovereign American people into their bankruptcy obligations. Their fraudulent money laundering process promotes your payment on the corporate government's bankruptcy debt. This debt is mathematically impossible to pay Off. You and your family are in continual financial bondage to the international bankers. They love it so!

Black's Law Dictionary 1990, defines "Money Changers" as: .....business of a banker... today handled by the international departments of banks." Let me think for a moment, what did Christ do to the Money Changers." Oh, Yes, he severely interfered with their activity. Three days later he was crucified. Lincoln was killed for interfering with the money changers. Kennedy was slaughtered for interfering with the money changers.

Let's return to the subject of your property, and the tax sale for not paying property taxes. In this situation under a standard deed (not common law deed) you are actually in default. Not because you understand the default or you like being in default, you just are in default of the tax payment. So they put your property up for sale. At the tax sale, Joe Doe, average American, bids on your property and gets it. Now, there is a procedure he must go through step by step to establish. He is required to give you another chance. You have six months and a day to pay off the default. If, at this time, you pay off the amount the county says you owe, plus penalties, interest, fines, etc., then your property is taken off default status and it is yours to continue to pay taxes on the next year.

THE COVER-UP
There was a deal struck that, if any person who doesn't have a lawyer to bring a case before the courts, and this person proves the fraud, and speaks the truth about the fraud, the courts are compelled to not allow the case to be cited or published anywhere. The courts cannot afford to have the case freely available in the public archives. This would be evidence of the fraud. That is why you can't hire an attorney. An attorney is compelled to uphold the fraud.

"TRUST ME"
"I'm Here To Help You."
"I Have The Governments Permission To Practice Law."
"I'm A Member of the Bar."
The attorney is there for one reason. That reason is to make sure the bankruptcy scam (established by the corporate public policy of the corporate Federal Government) is upheld. The lawyer's will cite no cases for you that will go against the bankruptcy in corporate public policy. Whatever the lawyers do for you is a bunch of Bull Shit. The lawyers have to support the bankruptcy and public policy even at your expense. The lawyers can't go against the corporate Federal Government statutes implementing, protecting and administrating the bankruptcy.

For all cases cited, those in the US Code or the state annotated code or any other source, you may be sure that they are only those selected cases that support the public policy of bankruptcy. The legal system has to work that way. After the last 30-40-50-60 years of cases after cases having been decided based upon upholding the bankruptcy, how could the legal system possibly allow someone to come into court and put in the record substantial information and argument to prove the fraud?

BLOOD IN THE STREETS?
Can you imagine how damaging it would be, if they allowed your case to be cited in another case, or if they allowed the public to examine a copy of your brief that exposes evidence of the fraud? This exposure would render null and void everything for which they have worked so hard. Wouldn't this exposure make the people mad? Wouldn't this exposure mean there would be blood running in the streets? Especially the cities where the poor people have been really taken by this diabolical system. What they are concerned about is that the case never be cited. That goes against the bankruptcy for fear of exposing the bankruptcy and the people will then pick up their guns and shoot the SOB's.

ATTENTION: LAW STUDENT!
You said you wanted to be a lawyer. Well, I hope you've read this carefully, because here is the legal system you're headed to serve, and serve you will. You say you wanted to be a lawyer so you can find out what oath they're taking, in "secret", behind closed doors in solemn preparation for the "business of the court" as judges and lawyers.

Now you know the oath. The oath is simply to uphold the bankruptcy. If you want to be a lawyer and want to make a living as a lawyer, be careful. They will weed you out at the beginning if you don't bring in your paperwork under the bankruptcy procedures. If you try to defend your clients and try to help your clients they will get rid of you. They will pull your license. So you spent all that money and time going to school under the guise of helping people and you're wasting your time. Without a license you can't go into a courtroom. I would think about this if I were you.

THE LAWYERS GUILD CONNECTION
Here is what happens. The American Bar Association is a franchise of the Lawyers Guild of Great Britain. The American Bar Association is not connected primarily with what happens in any case on the local level. However, when a case leaves the local level, by that is meant, the state court, city court or the justice of the peace, or even the federal court; and goes to the appeal's court, it would appear that the American Bar Association takes notice of the case. It would seem that the American Bar Association must have an agreement that any action brought on appeal, must be reviewed by the American Bar Association. If this is true, it would make sense. How else would the American Bar Association, a branch of the Lawyers Guild of Great Britain, which is the legal arm of the Rothschild's Dynasty, be able to monitor and administer the corporate bankruptcy. It would appear that the American Bar Association would be compelled to review all appeal cases and to make certain any case brought under common law or the constitutional law that would expose the bankruptcy, would be immediately stamped on the back that "this case is not to be cited or published." I believe that this is the stamp origin and purpose of the stamp message in such cases. The justice department may be able to do that in Washington D.C.. I can't see where any judge or lawyer could have the authority to stamp or label the case as one not to be cited for future cases. I think that is an official stamp from the American Bar Association.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACCOUNTING SYSTEM
Now, Mr/Ms. Law Student, if you're still attending classes and you have a good professor, ask him/her about just where the stamp comes from that you've seen on many cases. Just who put it on the paperwork and just who authorized the citation restriction. Just who is tampering with the law. There is one thing certain the creditor and or his agents are watching these cases very carefully. The creditor and his agents must balance their books. When you think of the IRS, be aware that the IRS is an agent of the creditor, the corporate International Bankers. This is just one of the Bankers' state side agencies. The General Accounting Office (GAO) is another agency they use for this country.

This is where all the accounting goes on to keep track of the debt. All the states have to send reports to Washington D.C. Washington D.C. has to send reports to the (GAO). Take a look at your state Comptroller's Annual Report to the Governor of your state. I found it in the library located in the city of the corporate state capital. Look under "Trust Fund" for each state sub-corporation like the state courts, IRS, Banks, Education, etc. you will be amazed at the amount of money being pumped into the Trust Fund from the various Corporate State Departmental Revenues (all revenue is referred to as taxes: fines, fees, licenses, etc.). There are millions and billions of your hard earned worthless federal reserve notes, "dollars", being held in "trust."This money is being siphoned off into the coffers of the International Bankers while the corporate government officials are hounding you for more and more tax dollars.

All this accounting system is NOT so the people will know what is going on. The accounting reports are for the bankers and creditors to keep tabs on just where their collections are coming from. The bankers want to know if the bankruptcy debt payments are coming in and just how much and from what sources. This accounting is the purpose behind M1, M2, M3, M4. and M5. All this accounting is closely monitored. Maybe every day, but at least once a week. These M's are the reports of the amounts of money in circulation. The amount of debt out there, and the amount of credit out there. The floating of debt in the form of bonds. There are five different categories. This system had to come into existence in order for the creditors to be on top of the bankruptcy at all times. This system allows the creditors to figure out and know exactly what is going on in their domain.

It all makes sense. Don't the bankers hire bill collectors? Creditors hire bill collectors to snoop around do see why you're not paying. They want do know how much you are going to pay so they can figure out how much will be coming in. How much they will collect. They want to know who will pay and who won't.

THE WHOLE SYSTEM IS NOTHING BUT CREDIT AND DEBT.
THE WORLD CREDIT UNION

Here is what is going to very quickly happen internationally. All of the governments around the world are going to unite. They will create one big giant credit union for collecting the debt for the International Bankers. We have allowed ourselves do get into this very sad situation, but THAT IS THE WAY IT IS.

The ultimate result of shielding men from the effects of folly is to fill the world with fools. -- "State Tamperings with Money Banks" -- Herbert Spencer (1820-1903)

I hate to bring this to your attention, but no amendments have been made to the Constitution in recent times to have nullified it ...

What have you been smoking?

Soo now you see our Constitution is not worth the paper it was written on.
It was replaced with the "Universal Commercial Code" this is now the supreme law of the land.

If it violates the Constitution, it is unconstitutional ...

You need to realize that criminals can say anything, do anything, but, mostly, it will just be criminal ...

Basic Physics you say? The word false is represented by the letter F and the letter f is sometimes replaced with PH. Soo most certainly the use or study of Falseycs cant be a determining factor. In the degre PHd means one that has been fully indoctronated in False Doctoring.
Limprod you must have a 33rd degree PHd.

You don't see racism. It uses just about every negative black stereotype there is. That awful voiceover guy is supposed to be portraying an African American. They couldn't find a real black guy to deliver the awful lines.
What's worse is that it's Herman that delivers the worse of it.

No, no, John-boy. I asked you to explain how the birth announcements were printed in two newspapers.
#
How did Obama's mom do it, and show us proof that she did do it that way.

Since YOU are the one claiming it's some evidence, you first have to demonstrate HOW that evidence came to be.
Can you demonstrate how Obama's mom had the announcements placed ?
We'll wait for YOUR evidence that she "did do it that way"..

That might be rather hard for you to prove, since the grandparents address is used one would suspect it was the grandparents of Anns'.

Who is Eligible to Apply for an Amended Certificate of Birth?

As provided by law (HRS ï¿½ï¿½338-17.7, 338-20.5), the following persons may apply for an amended certificate of birth:

A person born in the State of Hawaii who already has a birth certificate filed with the Department of Health and has become legally adopted, or has undergone a sex change operation, or a legal determination of the nonexistence of a parent and child relationship for a person identified as a parent on the birth certificate on file has been made, or previously recorded information in relation to the personï¿½s surname and/or the fatherï¿½s personal particulars has been altered pursuant to law.

A person born in a foreign country who has been legally adopted in the State of Hawaii.

How to Apply for an Amended Certificate of Birth

For a person born in the State of Hawaii who already has a birth certificate filed with the Department of Health and has become legally adopted.

The said what they meant, and meant what they said, the forefathers.
First they said it with pen and paper, then they said it with gun and revolution.

When finished, they left us the command to do it again, if ever necessary.

Things are quite clear and simple on this.

Every time you post something about the BC thing, you prove how clueless you are. Youreally don't understand how anything really works, do you, Johnny KooK?

The birth announcements come from the hospital, you idiot.

For the claim that Obama was born outside the USA to have any validity, you would have to show that hos mother had been outside the USA the day he was born. Thus far, that hasn't been done.

IOW, stop beating this dead horse and instead focus on Obama's demonstrated incompetence.

We shouldn't have to prove anything.

To get the job of president, he was supposed to prove his eligibility, so far, he has NOT done that.

He needs to come up with a valid birth certificate which is not forged, and heads need to roll of those who allowed him illegal entry to the public servant office.

... end of story ...

<snip>

Seems to me you're simply bitching because there is an advantage to busting ass and getting ahead. Because while they end up with X times more than case number one, they also paid X times more. Seems your gripe is that they still have more disposable income left over and somehow you don't see that as fair.

So tell us, why should they be forced to pay more? Because you think it's fair that we sock it to the rich?

BWHAHAHAHA! You really need to stop reading the birther kookpages. But if you got sane all of a sudden, you wouldn't be Johnny KooK anymore, and that wouldn't be any fun.

Look around you, only 5 to 7 "Americans" are even worth bothering with, the rest mindless slugs, cowards, perverts and homosexuals, etc.

I'd imagine about the same percentage were the ones who gave us the

What other way can he prove he wasn't born in Kenya, or Mars, for that matter?

I had to show mine just to get a stupid drives license!

It seems things out of a cracker jack box just won't serve as proof ...
but, explaining that to idiots is hopeless, as proven countless times here.

A nine-layered, forged birth certificate, is a bit "snarky!"

ROFLOL

The president has been accused of the crime of forgery. There are multiple pages, quoting multiple experts, showing the birth certificate is forged.

What can obama do about it? Sue?

NO! He can't do a damn thing, the truth still can't be prosecuted, yet, in America!

ROFLOL

obama, YOU ARE A FORGER!

Really, I thought he sounded white.

But why are discussing a nonexistent racial issue instead of the fact that President JugEars and the Keystone Congress DIDN'T pass a budget for FY2011?

I mean are they not Constitutinally mandated to do so?

And given the fiscal problems facing the country doesn't that strike you as irresponsible beyond words?

Just because your token darkie is a failure doesn't mean all African Americans are.

Hey, if someone convinced me that I was stuck where I am because of my race, that would be on me.

If every time someone called me "cracker", "white boy", "honky", "caucasian", etc., that would be my mental problem, NOT theirs!

Just sayin' the truth ... be proud of your race, or be ashamed, but don't get angry at others for your decision!

Well, they have proved the ones obama posted on the whitehouse website are forgery!

obama IS A FORGER!

Why he should be special is criminal in nature and intent. He needs to be prosecuted for posting forged documents which he plans to profit from -- or else they need to turn a hell of a lot of forgers out of our prisons!

So she used her grandparents address. You were expecting an 18 year old

Not everyone lives in their moms' basement like you, and expects everyone else to do the same. Yeah, I pretty much find it shocking to be living with grandparents when you are 18, but a sign of the times, I guess ... I mean, YOU ARE AN ADULT for gawds sake!

I had a two bedroom apartment and pretty much lived there when I was 17 and attending college ... my mom always said I just stopped by her house to eat and borrow tools from my father.

Times have not always been so bad you had to live with your parents until your old age! ROFLOL

- Seems to me you're simply bitching because
- there is an advantage to busting ass and
- getting ahead. Because while they end up
- with X times more than case number one,
- they also paid X times more.

No #1's Sale Tax is XX% and #3's Income Tax is XX%
XX% = XX% They just Continue to Pay Their Fair Share
Beyond the Cost of Buying a Basic Living Through Daily Consumption.
- Seems your gripe is that they still have
- more disposable income left over and somehow
- you don't see that as fair.

? What More Fair ?
Taking $5K from the Disposable Income
of the average Working Man {Family} and Leaving Them With NOTHING !
-or-
Taking $50K from the Disposable Income of the Very High Income Earner {Family} and Leaving Them With $200K which is Four-Times [4X] the Gross Income of the average Working Man {Family} !
-or-

Taking $500K from the Disposable Income of the Rich and Wealth {Family} and Leaving Them With $2M which is Forty-Times
[40X] the Gross Income of the average Working Man {Family} !
-and-once-again-
This Ensures High Income Earners Pay* Their Fair
{Equal} Share of the Cost of American Society.
* Simply Paying Back To {Into} The Society :
That Which You Have Received Greatly From It
-paying-back-social-responsibility-reciprocity-
- So tell us, why should they be forced
- to pay more?

To Ensure High Income Earners Pay* Their Fair
{Equal} Share of the Cost of American Society.
* Simply Paying Back To {Into} The Society :
That Which You Have Received Greatly From It
-paying-back-social-responsibility-reciprocity-
- Because you think it's fair that we sock
- it to the rich?

Not Interested in SOCKING-IT-TO Anyone [.]

Equal Taxes : Sales = Income = Corporate
-leveling-the-tax-taxing-playing-field-

Tax the Poor and average Working Man {Family} with an XX% Flat Sales Tax on Consumption.

Tax the High Income Earner and Rich-Wealth with an XX% Flat Income* Tax on Excessive Income Greater Than Five-Times the average Working Man {Family}.

* Income is Income : Wages, Salary, Commissions, Interest, Dividends, Bonuses, Stock Options, Deferred Compensation, Other Benefits, etc...

Tax Corporations* with an XX% Flat Corporate Gross Earnings Tax on Income Greater Than Five-Times the average Working Man {Family}.

* Corporations & Sole Proprietorships & Partnerships & Trusts = All Forms of Business Economic Enterprises

How is the simple 'Continuation' of the Same Tax Level Sales XX% to Income Tax XX% For the Income in Excess of Five-Times average Working Man {Family} Socking It To Anyone ?

Average Working Man {Family} Income $50K : Means the First $250K Has No Income Tax.
Only Income in Excess of $250K is Taxed at the very same {equal} Rate XX% as the Sales Tax XX% -result- simply the 'Continuation' of the Same Tax Level beyond the Taxing of the Normal Consumption to Live that the Sales Tax Taxes. -yes-it-is-that-simple-

OK -if- In Fact They Bust Their Ass :
They Can Keep It :o)
BUT -then- No Inherited Wealth :
A Fair Start =TO=- A Fair Share [.]
-oops-another-inconvenient-truth-
The Vast Majority of the Rich & Wealth Did NOT Earn Their Wealth : They Simply Inherited Mega-Money, Property, Status and 'Connections'. -paris-hilton-

...so... Add One More "Equality" Tax an XX% Flat Inheritance Tax on Estates Valued Greater Than Five-Times the average Working Man {Family}. -after-all-fair-is-fair-
-again- ? Define "Their Fair Share" !

Equal : Sales = Income = Corporate Taxes

Yes, idiot, you FAIL to understand basic physics.

Your claims violate the laws of physics. They are physically impossible. Not only did they not happen, they could not possibly have happened. This is not in dispute.

You are ignorant and stupid, WrongTurnJoe. EVERYTHING in NIST is entirely correct. YOU are the one who was tasked with NAMING ONE THING in NIST that you think is incorrect and YOU have failed. It remains standing unchallenged as the truth. Your continued complete inability to NAME ONE THING only serves to underscore how correct its every detail is.

Why have you not yet been capable of NAMING ONE, WrongTurnJoe?

OK, Tnx on the BSKSA 7240...

Here is a recording of the 7245 kHz station beginning at 0626 UTC on May 28, 2011. At 01:07 minutes on the recording, a station ID is heard with the words "Mauritania Nouakchott" clearly stated.

Needless to say, going for a QSL with this one. Faint hopes, but

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

The only thing that is constitutional is a daily shit,your belief in freedom and Democracy is costing millions to die John Smith.

No one has demonstrated where his mother was ANYWHERE at the time
Why don't you provide evidence to suggest the mother was in Hawaii.
An birth notices in newspapers are not good enough, since anyone can buy such birth notices for a few bucks.

Your writing is very strange and borders on the incomprehensible.
Perhaps that is your intent...

Regarding what I presume is one of your responses:

"? Define "Their Fair Share" !"

Fair share would be defined as: proportionally equal.

Oh, much worse than that, this extracted from Jerome Corsi -- "Where's the Birth Certificate?: The Case that Barack Obama is not Eligible to be President" (partial, pages 73, 74):

"The Hawaiian law in effect at the time of Obamaï¿½s birth was the Revised Law of the Territory of Hawaii, 1955.
Under Chapter 57, ï¿½Vital Statistics,ï¿½ Section 9(a) opens the door for a family to make a false claim and obtain a Hawaii birth certificate for a child born outside the state. The relevant section of the statute provides that if neither parent of the newborn child is available to prepare a birth certificate, ï¿½the local registrar shall secure the necessary information from any person having knowledge of the birth and prepare and file the certificate.ï¿½
Clearly, Obamaï¿½s maternal grandparents could have presented themselves to the local registrar to obtain a birth certificate for Barack Hussein Obama, Jr., even if the child were born outside Hawaii.
Furthermore, Section 57ï¿½9(b) allows the filing of a birth certificate on which the required information is simply missing, to be filled in later with a ï¿½supplementary report.ï¿½ When a supplementary report is filed to complete an earlier filed Hawaiian birth certificate, the resulting new document was not characterized or recorded as either ï¿½delayedï¿½ or ï¿½altered.ï¿½
This provision gave exceptionally wide latitude for a family to record a birth as a ï¿½Hawaiian birthï¿½ and to receive a Hawaii birth certificate.
Hawaii Territorial Law Chapter 57 makes no provision for the local registrar to investigate or otherwise corroborate information a family provides to obtain a Hawaiian birth certificate on a newborn baby.
Section 57ï¿½8 specifies that ï¿½a certificate of every birth shall be filed with the local registrar of the district in which the birth occurred, by the physician, midwife or other legally authorized person in attendance at the birth; or if not so attended, by one of the parents.ï¿½ Then, as we saw above, Section 57ï¿½9(a) specified that if the parents were not available, anyone having knowledge of the birth could register it as a Hawaiian birth with the local registrar.

A review of the 1955 Hawaii Territorial Law leaves no doubt that a Hawaiian birth certificate was designed to be easily available to any Hawaiian family that wanted to claim a child had been born to the family in Hawaii, whether or not that was the case. If the family did not get around to filing for a birth certificate immediately, Section 57ï¿½19 provided that the family could file for a delayed certificate up to one year after the birth. Similarly, if the initial information filed needed to be changed, Section 57ï¿½19 provided that the certificate could be altered up to one year after the baby was born.
A key point is that Hawaiiï¿½s official birth certification system grew from an era when many babies were born at home. Thus, Hawaiiï¿½s official birth certification process functioned by accepting what amounted to the familyï¿½s word."

The newspaper announcements are worthless, only morons would attempt to use them as an "proof", of anything!

FROM, Jerome Corsi -- "Where's the Birth Certificate?: The Case that Barack Obama is not Eligible to be President" (page 75):

"But the birth announcements published in the Hawaii newspapers prove only that Obamaï¿½s birth was registered in Hawaii, not that he was actually born there. As we saw earlier, the Hawaii DOH would have accepted a statement from the family that the baby was born in Hawaii without demanding any proof. Hawaii vital statistics records demonstrate there were forty-two unattended births at home in Hawaii in 1961."

Anyone attempting to use the newspaper as proof has already lost the argument and has nothing better -- indeed, they have nothing at all!

And, from

"Why Obama Is Not a Natural-born Citizen Under the 14th Amendment.

From, Jerome Corsi -- "Where's the Birth Certificate?: The Case that Barack Obama is not Eligible to be President" (Pgs. 50, 51)

Supporters of illegal immigration use the 14th Amendment to argue that children of illegal aliens are automatically American citizens if they are born in the United States. Creating what is today known as ï¿½birthright citizenship,ï¿½ the argument relies on an interpretation of the 14th Amendment never intended or contemplated by its authors.
The controversial interpretation demands an exclusive focus on the first clause of the first sentence, but excluding the second clause, as if the sentence read: ï¿½All persons born or naturalized in the United States ï¿½ are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.ï¿½

Advocates for illegal immigrants intentionally ignore the qualifying clause, ï¿½and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.ï¿½
Read correctly, the amendmentï¿½s first sentence stipulates two conditions for birth citizenship: (1) the person must be born in the United States, and (2) he must also be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at the time he is born. Read incorrectly, the sentence assumes the person is under the jurisdiction of the United States just because he is born in the United States.
To understand the importance of this distinction, recall that the authors of the 14th Amendment intended that a child of foreign diplomats born in the United States would not automatically be considered a U.S. citizen.
Why not? Because the parents were understood to bear their allegiance to the nation they were representing as diplomats while living in the United States. In other words, the authors of the 14th Amendment presumed a child born in the United States would have the citizenship of the parents. A child born in the United States to foreign nationals would be considered a citizen of the foreign nation to which the parents bore allegiance.
The author of the citizenship language of the 14th Amendment, Michigan Senator Jacob M. Howard, arose in the Senate during the 1866 debate to clarify: ï¿½This amendment which I have offered is simply declaratory of what I regard as the law of the land already, that every person born within the limits of the United States, and subject to their jurisdiction, is by virtue of natural law and national law a citizen of the United States.
This will not, of course, include persons born in the United States whoare foreigners, aliens, who belong to the families of ambassadors or foreign ministers accredited to the Government of the United States, but will include every other class of persons.ï¿½87
The records of the 1866 congressional debates make clear that Senator Howardï¿½s views were shared by Illinois Senator Lyman Trumbull, who, like Howard, is considered a primary framer of the 14th Amendment. Both senators agreed that the ï¿½subject to the jurisdictionï¿½ clause was crafted to mean ï¿½sole and completeï¿½ U.S. jurisdiction, excluding anyone subject to the jurisdiction of a foreign power."

Since the father, claimed by obama jr., was NOT a citizen, we have a real and important problem!

I says to my little couch buddy doggy, I says,,, What's up wichoo? She starts howling and jumps down on the floor and pacing back and forth with more howling.

What's up wichoo? I think it's the wichoo that gets on her nerves.

You seem to feel that because the criminals do not obey the constitution there is now no reason for anyone else to.

I don't, we simply imprison and hang the criminals and return the law to the land.

This is the TRUE reason the forefathers gave us weapons for!

I think Jefferson said it best:
```

"The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is itï¿½s natural manure."

It is no different than any other war, in this case it is just more personal and involves domestic enemies, as opposed to foreign.

It amazes me, back when in school in the 60's, this was standard fare and you were taught to protect your country -- because if you lose it, you don't have a country to live in ... I guess the school system has failed many, again ...

Catch you? Where, in your rubber cell? Sorry but the nice men in the white coats beat me to it a long time ago, WrongTurnJoe.

Hey, when will you even bother to TRY to NAME ONE THING that is wrong in the NIST report? By now it's painfully embarrassing to you that you've been unable to come up with even one error in the official

That is of course a lie, but we're not surprised since everything you have said is a lie, as I proved beyond question.

HAHAHA. The birth certificate was exposed as a fake weeks ago. Not that anything will be done about it. If bush can get away with lying us into holocausting iraq and murdering a million innocent civilians then i'm sure no govt official will do anything to bammer over his birth lie.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

Wow ! Nice recording . Which radio /antenna/auxiliary equipment did you use for that ?

Read & Re-Read -try-to-understand-
? Define "Their Fair Share" !
Who Benefits By Our Society ?
-and- What Is Their Reward ?
Beyond The Ability to Live a Reasonable Life Food, Cloth and House Their Family.
-four-examples-
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/96e43dec055fe598
First is 20% Tax of $1K on $5K and Leaving $4K.
-a-little-injustice-to-the-common-man-

? What More Fair ?
Taking $5K from the Disposable Income
of the average Working Man {Family}
and Leaving Them With NOTHING !
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/e100261343df6fc5 Second is 100% Tax of $5K on $5K and Leaving $0K [Nothing].
-that's-a-great-injustice-to-the-common-man-
-or-
Taking $500K from the Disposable Income of the Rich and Wealth {Family} and
Leaving Them With $2M which is Forty-Times
[40X] the Gross Income of the average Working Man {Family} !
-and-once-again-
This Ensures High Income Earners Pay* Their Fair
{Equal} Share of the Cost of American Society.
* Simply Paying Back To {Into} The Society :
That Which You Have Received Greatly From It
-paying-back-social-responsibility-reciprocity-

HAHAHA. The birth certificate was exposed as a fake weeks ago. Not that anything will be done about it.

Hint: If the state of Hawaii (or any other state, for that matter) produced it, in no matter WHAT form, it cannot, by definition, be a fake. If the government produced it, it is a legal document in a court of law.

I believe that is what nixon tried to pull, "If the president does it, it isn't a crime!" (paraphrased) Or, stated differently, a president can NOT do a burglary, or conspire to do a burglary! BS!

Criminal public servants MUST obey the law, the law applies to all, evenly (well, it is supposed to!)

If obama is using a document which is falsified and fraudulent, and using it for personal gain, it is a CRIME OF HIGH TREASON. The fact that it would be an official who is abusing the publics' trust only makes it more of a horror, and deserving of a greater punishment!

Fraud is fraud -- even if nixon himself were to do it.

Lawyers may argue this, but the ones which argue the above as fact will surely win ...

JS

Kenya, itself, is showing quite a bit of interest in the obama crimes:

http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=303053

This criminal president is becoming a MAJOR liability, he is open to blackmail on so many fronts. I am hoping there are very capable people in the CIA and FBI which realize this and they have the whitehouse, obama, his family, his friends, his contacts, etc. under heavy surveillance!

This is the most shocking display of improper actions of a president in my lifetime, indeed, the most shocking I have ever heard of to date ...

BTW, Jerome Corsis' book is GREAT!

Limprod here is you another puzzle to solve!

The Case against Casey:

The whole Anthony family were devout sunworshippers.George and Cindy Anthony the Grandparents of Caylee Anthony,carried her to the Bohemian Grove for their Creamation of Care Ceremony.They used their grandchild as a sacrificial lamb for the festivities!

The whole family has concocted a story to explain the childs disapearance using Casey Anthony as their scapegoat.

This one is going to be interesting,as they are all devout sunworshippers,getting them all off,will make the Ramsey trail pale in comparison!

All they returned home with from their vacation at the Bohemian Grove was a bag of bones!

See what I mean John you were taught to protect your country from an invisable foe.The only countrys that need to learn to defend themselves are people that are afraid the USA will attack them.Soo far every World War has had the USA at the helm,they financed Hitlers Regiem,then sneaked him out of harms way when the USA joined forces against him.These madd Nazi Scientist are still in command of the government of the USA this is their 4th Reich

More shocking than starting TWO bogus, fake, fraudulent wars, overall costing tens of thousands of lives and a TRILLION dollars? That's not an "improper action of a president"?

You have a strange sense of values -- but then, we already knew that.

The bushkultie doesn't know much, and doesn't know the difference, either:

"UPS and Computers

The letters stand for ï¿½uninterruptible power supplyï¿½ ï¿½ batteries ï¿½ not United Postal Serviceï¿½ which NIST actually confused ï¿½ and confuses! See this letter from NIST to the Enrico Manieri:"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

That's quite an error, too.

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

It's a study in treachery.

They're all too weak to compete honestly/fairly.

The Bush crime family of treacherous wimps has never been on the same side as the USA.

ObL couldn't affect the USA's air defense system.

Cheney did.

""The U.S. government has consistently blamed me for being behind every occasion its enemies attack it.

"I would like to assure the world that I did not plan the recent attacks, which seems to have been planned by people for personal reasons," bin Laden's statement said."

Yes, the bushkultie is so stupid as to believe faked videos and disregard direct statements to authentic news organizations.

Can't expect a bushkultie to understand geometry, either:

"the angle was nearly perpendicular, between zero and four degrees.
Somehow, NIST and their associates missed by ten full degrees"

http://911conspiracy.wordpress.com/2010/07/11/nist-ara-error-speaks-volumes/

Notice that the bushkultie must ignore this fact, too.

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

>...cannot NAME ONE...

Of course you can't name one item of admissible evidence
that would exculpate your neocon idols, bushkultie.

So what's your excuse for your inability to insist on a valid trial for the most horrific crime of this millenium to date?

>kooker...

That is your best excuse.

>...Hates US

Of course you hate America when you insist that those who murder Americans should not be prosecuted according to the rule of law.

Notice that you can't name one thing that would be admissible evidence against the scapegoat chosen by your fascist masters.

You always do.

The bushkultie doesn't believe in actual admissible evidence.

The bushworshipper is so uncivilized as to prefer assassinations to trials.

It's not difficult to fool a bushkultie.

The bushworshipper has been tricked repeatedly.

The bushkultie is pitied, while a useful example.

The bushkultie is a mere dupe.

The bushworshipper was fooled easily by faked videos.

Others could see the discrepancies quite clearly.

The real perps were 'incompetent' all the way to their offshore accounts.

The claim of "incompetence" is ludicrous.

"...incompetence cannot explain the suppression of efforts to prevent the attacks."

The very people with established motives for conducting an event like the one that took place on 9/11/2001 were responsible for national security when we had that most unlikely, unrealistic and implausible complete catastrophic failure of every single defense procedure in operation."

http://www.tvnewslies.org/html/smoking_gun.html

The Japanese weren't permitted to surrender when they were ready to do so.

That was in order to intimidate the Soviets via the gratuitous use of the bomb.

It helps to understand the real situation, including that of Pearl Harbor.

The US goaded Japan into attacking, and then let the attack occur despite warnings of it, indeed even made itself more vulnerable to that attack than it should have. The US government at that time wanted to gain public support for war, and 'improve trade' in the east. They accomplished that, but threw in the added threat to everybody else by escalating to the use of nuclear bombs on civilians, when many who knew a great deal about the situation considered that excessive.

"The duty officer at U.S. Asiatic Fleet headquarters in Manila first received word of the Pearl Harbor attack at 0230 on 8 December 1941, but a full hour passed before Brig. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's chief of staff, heard the news from commercial broadcasts. He immediately notified MacArthur and all commanders that a state of war now existed with Japan. MacArthur ordered his troops to battle stations.

Despite this warning, when the Japanese pilots of the 11th Air Fleet attacked Clark Field nine hours later, they caught two squadrons of B-17s lined up on the field and a number of American fighters just preparing to take off. The first wave of twenty-seven Japanese twin-engine bombers achieved complete tactical surprise and destroyed most of the American heavy bombers. A second bomber strike followed while Zero fighters strafed the field. Only three P-40s managed to take off. A simultaneous attack on Iba Field in northwest Luzon was also successful: all but two of the 3d Squadron's P-40s were destroyed. The Far East Air Force lost fully half its planes the first day of the war. ..."

Were you unaware that Japan was provoked into that attack? The US froze Japanese assets (treaty violation) and embargoed their oil. Roosevelt was tired of supplying only materials to the war, and he saw Japan as the easiest way in, via an attack on US soil.

Why did Roosevelt order the pacific fleet to relocate from the west coast to Hawaii in the summer of 1940? Why was the commander, Admiral Richardson, removed after complaining that Pearl Harbor didn't offer sufficient air or topedo defense?

Didn't Roosevelt receive a memo in the fall of 1940, from a Navy analyst, describing eight ways to force Japan to attack the US (one of them an oil embargo), and all of them eventually implemented? Didn't Roosevelt's advisor Ickes tell him that an oil embargo would be an "easy" way to get into the war, the day after Hitler attacked Russia in the summer of 1941?

"President Franklin D. Roosevelt wanted to enter the war in Europe, especially after the fall of France (June 1940). In this desire he was supported by the old elite ... After meeting FDR at the Atlantic Conference (August 14, 1941) Churchill noted the "astonishing depth of Roosevelt's intense desire for war." But there was a problem: the President could not overcome the resistance to
"Europe's war" felt by most Americans and their elected representatives.

The mood of the country was a problem, and Roosevelt therefore resorted to subterfuge. He systematically and deliberately provoked the Japanese into attacking the United States. His real target was Hitler: Roosevelt expected the German dictator to abide by the Tripartite Pact and declare war on America, and hoped that Hitler's decision would be facilitated by a display of America's apparent vulnerability. Accordingly, even though Roosevelt was well aware of the impending attack on Pearl Harbor ..."

The US Army Signal Intelligence Service had cracked the Japanese codes before December of 1941. Although a British obsession with secrecy allowed the US to claim it had first deciphered JN25, it was actually done first by the British and Australians.

"The "true heroes" of the Allied codebreaking effort, Smith says, were Eric Nave, an Australian officer attached to the Royal Navy, and John Tiltman, a British cryptographer. Although the Americans claimed that they broke JN25, the Japanese navy's operational code which contributed to the destruction of the Japanese carrier fleet at Midway, it was the work of Tiltman -- only a few weeks after it came into use in 1939."

http://www.fpp.co.uk/online/00/09/Codebreaking2.html

"In 1979 the NSA released 2,413 JN-25 orders of the 26,581 intercepted by US between Sept 1 and Dec 4, 1941. The NSA says "We know now that they contained important details concerning the existence, organization, objective, and even the whereabouts of the

Pearl Harbor Strike Force." (Parker p 21) Of the over thousand radio messages sent by Tokyo to the attack fleet, only 20 are in the National Archives. All messages to the attack fleet were sent several times, at least one message was sent every odd hour of the day and each had a special serial number. Starting in early November 1941 when the attack fleet assembled and started receiving radio messages, OP-20-G stayed open 24 hours a day and the "First Team" of codebreakers worked on JN-25. In November and early December 1941, OP-20-G spent 85 percent of its effort reading Japanese Navy traffic, 12 percent on Japanese diplomatic traffic and 3 percent on German naval codes. FDR was personally briefed twice a day on JN-25 traffic by his aide, Captain John Beardell, and demanded to see the original raw messages in English. The US Government refuses to identify or declassify any pre-Dec 7, 1941 decrypts of JN-25 on the basis of national security, a half-century after the war."

Many people disagreed with the nuclear bombings of Japan:

"...in [July] 1945... Secretary of War Stimson, visiting my headquarters in Germany, informed me that our government was preparing to drop an atomic bomb on Japan. I was one of those who felt that there were a number of cogent reasons to question the wisdom of such an act. ...the Secretary, upon giving me the news of the successful bomb test in New Mexico, and of the plan for using it, asked for my reaction, apparently expecting a vigorous assent.

"During his recitation of the relevant facts, I had been conscious of a feeling of depression and so I voiced to him my grave misgivings, first on the basis of my belief that Japan was already defeated and that dropping the bomb was completely unnecessary, and secondly because I thought that our country should avoid shocking world opinion by the use of a weapon whose employment was, I thought, no longer mandatory as a measure to save American lives. It was my belief that Japan was, at that very moment, seeking some way to surrender with a minimum loss of 'face'. The Secretary was deeply perturbed by my attitude..." - Dwight Eisenhower, Mandate For Change, pg. 380

In a Newsweek interview, Eisenhower again recalled the meeting with Stimson:

"...the Japanese were ready to surrender and it wasn't necessary to hit them with that awful thing."
- Ike on Ike, Newsweek, 11/11/63

(Chief of Staff to Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman)
"It is my opinion that the use of this barbarous weapon at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was of no material assistance in our war against Japan. The Japanese were already defeated and ready to surrender because of the effective sea blockade and the successful bombing with conventional weapons.

"The lethal possibilities of atomic warfare in the future are frightening. My own feeling was that in being the first to use it, we had adopted an ethical standard common to the barbarians of the Dark Ages. I was not taught to make war in that fashion, and wars cannot be won by destroying women and children." - William Leahy, I Was There, pg. 441.

On August 8, 1945, after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Hoover wrote to Army and Navy Journal publisher Colonel John Callan O'Laughlin, "The use of the atomic bomb, with its

quoted from Gar Alperovitz, The Decision to Use the Atomic Bomb, pg. 635.

MacArthur biographer William Manchester has described MacArthur's reaction to the issuance by the Allies of the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan: "...the Potsdam declaration in July, demand[ed] that Japan surrender unconditionally or face 'prompt and utter destruction.' MacArthur was appalled. He knew that the Japanese would never renounce their emperor, and that without him an orderly transition to peace would be impossible anyhow, because his people would never submit to Allied occupation unless he ordered it. Ironically, when the surrender did come, it was conditional, and the condition was a continuation of the imperial reign. Had the General's advice been followed, the resort to atomic weapons at Hiroshima and Nagasaki might have been unnecessary." William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880-1964, pg. 512.

Norman Cousins was a consultant to General MacArthur during the American occupation of Japan. Cousins writes of his conversations with MacArthur,
"MacArthur's views about the decision to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were starkly different from what the general public supposed." He continues,
"When I asked General MacArthur about the decision to drop the bomb, I was surprised to learn he had not even been consulted. What, I asked, would his advice have been? He replied that he saw no military justification for the dropping of the bomb. The war might have ended weeks earlier, he said, if the United States had agreed, as it later did anyway, to the retention of the institution of the emperor."
Norman Cousins, The Pathology of Power, pg. 65, 70-71.

A panel set up by President Truman to study the Pacific war issued a report, the United States Strategic Bombing Survey, in July 1946, which declared,
"Based on a detailed investigation of all the facts, and supported by the testimony of the surviving Japanese leaders involved, it is the Survey's opinion that certainly prior to 31 December 1945, Japan would have surrendered even if atomic bombs had not been dropped, even if Russia had not entered the war, and even if no invasion had been planned or contemplated."

By 1945, Japan's entire military and industrial machine was grinding to a halt as the resources needed to wage war were all but eradicated. The navy and air force had been destroyed ship by ship, plane by plane, with no possibility of replacement. When, in the spring of 1945, the island nation's lifeline to oil was severed, the war was over except for the fighting. By June, Gen. Curtis LeMay, in charge of the air attacks, was complaining that after months of terrible firebombing, there was nothing left of Japanese cities for his bombers but "garbage can targets". By July, U.S. planes could fly over Japan without resistance and bomb as much and as long as they pleased. Japan could no longer defend itself.{6} After the war, the world learned what U.S. leaders had known by early 1945: Japan was militarily defeated long before Hiroshima. It had been trying for months, if not for years, to surrender; and the U.S. had consistently rebuffed these overtures. A May 5 cable, intercepted and decoded by the U.S., dispelled any possible doubt that the Japanese were eager to sue for peace. Sent to Berlin by the German ambassador in Tokyo, after he talked to a ranking Japanese naval officer, it read:

Since the situation is clearly recognized to be hopeless, large sections of the Japanese armed forces would not regard with disfavor an American request for capitulation even if the terms were hard...

As far as is known, Washington did nothing to pursue this opening. Later that month, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson almost capriciously dismissed three separate high-level recommendations from within the Roosevelt administration to activate peace negotiations. The proposals advocated signaling Japan that the U.S. was willing to consider the all-important retention of the emperor system; i.e., the U.S. would not insist upon "unconditional surrender"...

According to Manhattan Project scientist Leo Szilard, Secretary of State Byrnes had said that the bomb's biggest benefit was not its effect on Japan but its power to "make Russia more manageable in Europe"...

Of course, this was also the time in history when Prescott Bush, grandfather of the POTUS, was making a fortune in banking for the Nazis.

The truth is that the Bush regime deals terror. Wasn't the first Bush president involved in Iraqgate and Iran-Contra?

Anyone recall that the guy who shot Reagan was a Bush family friend?

Will anyone complain when anything branded a 'conspiracy theory' by the Bushites leads to arrests and asset forfeitures, without due process, of United States citizens?

The Bush regime benefits directly and substantially from that [9/11] attack, via entities such as the Carlyle Group.

'Born-again' Bush called it a 'crusade' against 'Islam', a 'war' against 'terrorism', as he let the postal workers die of anthrax.

Then why the hysteria against 'Islam' and not against 'Christianity' for the likes of the abortion-clinic bombers and the KKK?

Isn't ['Dubya'] the one who approves of groups associated with the KKK?

So US war machine propaganda means that the US military is terrorist. That's no surprise to folks in Nicaragua, and so many other places with similar histories ...

If only a true superpower would just win over populations by letting them farm their farms and work their trades and build schools and hospitals and medicine factories and roads, instead of destroying helpless innocent people in droves until there is no one with the strength left to complain.

The illegal invasion of Iraq is also a war crime of massive proportions.

It's a study in stupidity by you, kook. I guess you're too stupid to see the error that the blogger made. Hint: He's looking at the wrong building. Blatant and obvious error by yet another 9/11 kooker!!

You sure did not earn your money tonight from your hero Cheeeeeney, you traitor rightard bushkultie.

You're a snarky boy. You're male - nominally - and due to your immaturity, you're a boy, and due to your snarky, wet-behind-the-ears juvenile demeanor, you're a snarky boy - live with it, boy.

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

3833. Monica Pignotti Shaves Pippin Whitaker?

Monica Pignotti, in 2009, was dismissive of comparisons to Pippin Whitaker.

It is almost certain that Pignotti would advance some fantastic story as to why Whitaker has a faculty position and she does not.

Pignotti, of all people, should understand the proper application of Occam's Razor.

Monica Pignotti does not understand the academic hiring process.

Academic institutions are shocked at the amount of material she has posted about herself to the Internet. They are also concerned that she spends so much time participating in debates about Scientology, which she claims to have left decades ago.

Pignotti might do well to compare her career to that of Pippin Whitaker, who joined the faculty of the University of South Carolina in 2010:

http://www.cosw.sc.edu/news/470-dr-pippin-whitaker-to-join-faculty

Unlike Pignotti, Whitaker has not made thousands of postings to the Internet about herself.

In addition, she does not appear to have questionable associations with the likes of:

Larry Sarner, who conned lenders and investors with non-working voting machines; Whitaker also had the prudence not to join a "child torture fetish" group operated by Sarner

Scientology, an unscientific cult with teachings about the nuclear bombardment of Hawaii

Thought Field Therapy, an unscientific treatment that cures diseases by tapping based on telephonic diagnosis.

Rob Clark, known for having made bomb threats against churches and weather stations

Jean Mercer, removed from an editorial position at Psychology Today due to defamation

Eldon Braun, who fled to France to avoid the consequences of defeat in court for copyright infringement and allegations of child abuse

Charly D. Miller, who was fired from a position as an ambulance driver for drinking on the job

Thanks! It was my usual Icom R75, and two antennas - an Alpha Delta DX Ultra + a 65-foot horz/30 foot vert inverted L, phased through a MFJ-1026 noise canceller. Believe me, the MFJ makes a difference - it chopped the noise way down. One of these days I will put up a before/after comparison of the MFJ unit. It'll make a believer out of anyone.

To record, I used a simple but better-than-average mono cassette tape recorder (using a standard bias Maxell tape) patched directly to the tape output on the Icom, and then I transferred the 6-minute segment to the PC (dividing the mono signal into "stereo" with the patchcord) using whatever software Microsoft provides to record audio. One of these days, I will actually have a PC next to the radio, but for now it's a two-step process.

Why support GPS?

Probably because there are -millions- of civilians (taxpayers) that use it...hikers, pilots, mariners and did I mention -millions- of people driving their cars wanting to find their way over the river and through the woods to grandma's house with their GPS.

3846. Latin American SW Logs Page Updated

The Latin American SW Logs page has been updated as of 31 May:

http://www.mcdxt.it/LASWLOGS.html

dxAce
Michigan
USA

Drake R7, R8, R8A and R8B
70' and 200' wires
GE SR I (2) and II

239 countries heard and 225 QSL'd (veried, for those in Glendale) using the NASWA Country List.

And, as always, don't let your children attend the Sullivan College of Technology & Design (Backwater U.).

They've hired at least one dufus who once claimed to have a PhD and lied about being arrested, and who knows, there may be more dufi there.

Fark, As far as the University knew, I lived in Salem (Or) for sixteen years after I graduated. Never mind that I was physically in other towns or states). That was the address of record, a stable address I could use.

oooooo,,, Backyard Burgers on North State Street is on fire.Mary Wieden, riding around in WLBT 3's Skycopter 3 (the tee vee station that doesn't exist) showed us a live video of Backyard Burgers.Looks like the aircondioning thangy on the roof top is what is on fire.

80 million dollars to be spent for adding an extra lane to I-55 South, between McDowell Road and the town of Terry in South Jackson.80 million dollars of Missy Sippy dollars, that is.

MFJ 1026 is a very good unit , I guess . Will have to look into it's circuitry ; maybe I'll gather some loose parts and try building something similar .

No, he would not have been a citizen had he been born abroad (which he very well may have been.) The McCarran Walter Act, aka the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952, specified in Title III, Ch. 1, Sec. 301(a):

The following shall be citizens and nationals of the United State at birth:

(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years

Hussein's one citizen parent was only 18 at the time of his birth, which means she arithmetically could not have met the physical presence requirement. Had he been born abroad, he would not have been born a citizen. As he may very well have been born abroad, and never naturalized, then he may not be a citizen at all.

You're a snarky boy. You're male - nominally - and due to your immaturity, you're a boy, and due to your snarky, wet-behind-the-ears juvenile demeanor, you're a snarky boy - live with it, boy.
